Dedication.

What is written here for gladsome youth,
Half in jest, and half in truth,
We dedicate, though tribute mean,
To thee, Sabrina, Guardian Queen.

Preface.

ALTHOUGH the Senate is departed, THE OLIO still lives. It is our pleasure to present to the College THE OLIO of the Class of Ninety-Six.

We have not created in our little volume; we have only recorded the happenings of a college year. If some of our readers feel slighted in our records, we humbly beg their pardon. It has been our aim to correct evils, praise glorious achievements, and sit in judgment.

We have tried to be leaders and not followers. We have instituted several innovations, which seemed to us worthy of acceptance. We have given a place in our volume to the ten-year class, Eighty-Four. They were lively men in their day, and their interest in the College and its welfare is just as strong as it ever was. We give them place with the class just gone out, Ninety-Four.

We have given especial thought to the mechanical features of the NINETY-SIX OLIO, and believe that we have greatly added to the beauty of the work by introducing initials in color. The initials are original reproductions from an old missal, the Pontificate of John II., Archbishop of Treves, date about 1480.

In closing up our typewriter, we want to give one word of advice. Don't rave at THE OLIO editor; pity him next winter when he trudges through rain and snow to go to church and chapel. Such is usually his reward, for he is likely to be removed from the vicinity of his cuts, for a term at least. If you like the volume, we will not begrudge the absence of cuts. To Amherst undergraduates and friends, we introduce the NINETY-SIX OLIO.

THE EDITORS.

Prof. John B. Clark.

JOHAN BATES CLARK, who fills the Chair of Political Economy at Amherst, was born January 26, 1847, in Providence, R. I. His father, John H. Clark, was a manufacturer; his mother was the daughter of Dr. Thomas Huntington, the youngest son of Gen. Jedidiah Huntington, of New London, Conn. Professor Clark has, therefore, by right of inheritance, both the industrial traits and the conservatism of New England.

Until his twentieth year, his home was at Providence. In the public schools of that city, he fitted for college, and passed at Brown the first and second years of his college course. In 1867, owing to the—happily temporary—crippled condition of the faculty of that institution, he came to Amherst and entered as Junior the class of '69. Before the close of the year he was called to the new home of his family, Minneapolis, Minn. It was the failing health of his father that had led to the removal from Providence, and that now broke in upon his academic course. At Minneapolis he assumed and carried for more than a year business responsibilities of considerable weight. Here, too, he came, for the first time, under the spell of the new Northwest; and each influence, that of business responsibility and that of the new environment, had in it a valuable tonic quality. Moreover, some of those who are privileged to know him best think they find the source of certain traits which they greatly like, in the filial solicitude which kept the thought of self far in the background at the very period in a young man's life when it is naturally, and, perhaps justifiably, most prominent. An improvement, unhappily transient, in his father's health, permitted his return in the fall of '69 to Amherst, and the resumption of study with the class of '71. Then came his father's death and a second interruption of his course at Amherst; this time, however, it lasted but a year. He graduated with the class of '72. It is, perhaps, noteworthy that his connection with '69, '71 and '72 made him, for nearly equal periods, the classmate of Prof. H. B. Adams of Johns Hopkins University, and of Professors Garman, Morse and Richardson, who are now his colleagues at Amherst.

Of Professor Clark's scholarship it is enough to say that, in spite of two breaks in his college course, which together covered fully three years, and in spite of the distracting and absorbing nature of the cause of these breaks, his standing at graduation was higher than that of any man of his class. Of his character during this period the best witness is the singularly deep and fine impression which he made on classmates and teachers.

While at Amherst President Seelye, then Professor of Mental and Moral Philosophy, advised him to give special attention to social and economic studies, and his interest in these developed rapidly under the instruction of this wise counsellor and powerful teacher. During his Senior year he made that analysis of wealth which was afterwards published in chapter first of "The Philosophy of Wealth."

The three years following graduation were passed in Germany, Switzerland and France, in the study of economics and history. One semester was spent at Zurich, and a considerable period at Paris, but the larger part of his university work was done at Heidelberg under the direction of Professor Knies. It is worth remarking that these three years abroad were not, in the ordinary sense, wanderjahre; for the companionship of his mother and sister gave him, although a resident of foreign lands, the advantages of an American home. On his return to the United States in 1875, he married Miss Myra A. Smith of Minneapolis. In his home there are now three sons in various stages of preparation for Amherst College, and a daughter who has not yet decided between the claims of Vassar, of which her mother is a graduate, and Smith, where her father was an honored professor.

Professor Clark's career as a teacher began in 1875 with an appointment to a lectureship in Carleton College, Carleton, Minn. A few weeks after the beginning of his work, a severe typhoidal illness led to an enforced vacation of more than a year. In 1877 he was appointed Professor of Economics and History at Carleton, and there he remained until 1882, when he accepted the Chair of History and Political Science at Smith College. In 1892 he was elected Professor of Political Economy at Amherst; during the following year he gave instruction both at Smith and at Amherst; in '93 the transfer to Amherst was completed. In addition to his professorship at Amherst, he has held, since 1892, the position of Lecturer on Economics at Johns Hopkins University. The fact that both at Carleton and Smith the parting was with very great reluctance, bears pleasant testimony to the impression he made on the trustees, the faculty and the students of these institutions; and here at Amherst the appreciation, already marked, of his fine and sterling traits as man and teacher, is steadily growing.

In the promotion of economic science through the association of those who made its advancement their life work, Professor Clark has taken a leading part. In 1885 he helped to organize the American Economic Association, the largest and most active of its kind in the world. At its founding he was made third

Vice-president, and the chairman of the Committee on Economic Theory. In 1893 he was elected president; his immediate predecessor in this office was Professor Dunbar, of Harvard, who followed Gen. Francis A. Walker (A. C. class of 1860), the first president.

Professor Clark's publications on economic subjects amount all told to thirty. These have appeared for the most part in the New Englander, the Political Science Quarterly, the International Journal of Ethics, the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, the Quarterly Journal of Economics, the Yale Review, the Revue d'Economie Politique, and Palgrave's Dictionary of Political Economy. The themes treated are indicated by the following titles: "The Law of Wages and Interest," "Distribution as Determined by a Law of Rent," "The Ultimate Standard of Value," "The Genesis of Capital," "Insurance and Business Profits," "Trusts," "The Influence of Land on the Rate of Wages," "The Statics and the Dynamics of Distribution." The articles first published in the New Englander, nine in number, were re-published with some others in 1883, under the title of "The Philosophy of Wealth." This book was followed by a monograph on "Capital and its Earnings." Another monograph, written in co-operation with Mr. Stuart Wood, was on "Wages." Two of the articles that appeared in the Political Science Quarterly were re-published with two by Professor Giddings, in a volume entitled "The Modern Distributive Process."

In their entirety these various publications present a system of Economics the central feature of which is a new theory of Distribution. According to this theory the existing industrial system, though containing abuses, is in principle sound; and the abuses will gradually disappear if the legal and moral forces of society acting in their own distinct and proper spheres can be made to do their full duty. Briefly told, Professor Clark in spirit, thought and method, is conservatively progressive. His presence at Amherst gives to every friend of the College cause for hope and cheer.

The College.

NY one year in the growth of the College will often be wanting in striking features. When the institution is developing on permanent lines, it simply manifests the flower and fruitage of its own life.

The changes in the College buildings have been few, and to an outside observer would seem fewer than they are. In the south dormitory, bathrooms have been added to complete the comfort and wholesomeness of this building. The rooms in both dormitories are all taken, and the old college life is revived in rooms such as the old life never dreamed of.

By the removal of the departments of Chemistry and Physics into their new laboratories, several rooms in the older buildings have become available for lectures or recitations, and now the department of Rhetoric, the department of Public Speaking, and Professor Cowles' department of Latin, have all rooms of their own, both convenient and attractive. These departments have long needed such accommodation, and students as well as instructors are at last happy in their new homes. Abundant apparatus has been ordered by Professor Garman for experiments in Psychology.

This year we have enrolled the largest number of students in the history of the College. We are also assured that the classes are growing better as they grow larger.

The Faculty has been increased by adding to its number Dr. Arthur J. Hopkins and Mr. W. P. Bigelow. Dr. Hopkins takes the position of instructor in Chemistry, and will greatly aid in developing the possibilities of the new laboratory. He was graduated by Amherst with the class of 1885, took his degree of Ph.D. at Johns Hopkins two years later, and was then appointed instructor and assistant in the laboratories of that university. From that position he was called to be the head of the department of Chemistry in Westminster College, and resigned that professorship to come to us. Mr. Bigelow is an Amherst alumnus of the class of 1889. Since he was graduated he has spent his time in Germany, mainly at Dusseldorf, in the study of music and of the German language and literature. He comes to fill two positions, both of which have held out eager hands for the right man. He will assist Professor Richardson in the department of German, and also direct the College music. The change that was feared in the College Faculty has not taken place, for Professor Garman has refused the call to become the head of the department of Philosophy in the University of Michigan, and remains with us. He has thus gratified his old students and encouraged those who still look forward to his instruction. The department of Geology loses the services of Mr. F. B. Peck, who has gone to Germany for study. Professor Emerson has returned, thoroughly restored and fully armed for work. Prof. John M. Tyler is also again in his place, after six months absence in Germany. Thus all the Professors are here and the list of the Faculty is complete. Almost as we go to press we hear of one exception. The news reaches us that Professor Kimball has been obliged on account of ill-health to stop teaching for a limited period. We shall all miss the invigoration of his accurate and comprehensive scholarship, the charm of his lucid instruction and the refinement of his gentle nature, counting the weeks till he returns. The College, fortunately, has been able to secure immediately the services of Dr. Joseph O. Thompson of the class of 1884, and for the last three years Professor of Physics at Haverford College. During Professor Kimball's absence, Professor Thompson will have charge of the department.

Two somewhat significant changes have been made in the academic requirements.

The first relates to the required attendance at church. We print the new regulation in the words of the communication from the Faculty: "With the opening of the college year, Amherst College requires, on Sunday, attendance upon but one service, the morning preaching service. Required attendance at one service sufficiently emphasizes the conviction of the College that it is the duty of every student to attend divine worship and to hear instruction from God's Word. The second Sunday service, 'vespers,' a half-hour service of music, prayer and Bible reading, at five o'clock (which is immediately followed by the class prayer meeting of each of the classes,) will be continued, not as an institutional requirement, but for those members of the College who may wish to attend such a service of praise and prayer. At this vesper service there will be no formal seating of the classes by themselves; but students and members of the Faculty will occupy any seats they choose."

The second concerns the curriculum for Senior year. The Faculty have decided that Seniors shall be required to elect only three full courses. The Professor may offer either four or five hours a week as a full course, or either two or three hours a week as a half course. Students in their last year are thus allowed to concentrate their work and prepare themselves to accomplish that sort of study which their after life will demand.

It will be seen that the changes during the last year have been few, but each one has been in the direction of a broader and deeper life, both of the mind and of the spirit.

SOME philosopher once said, "Happy is that people which has no history;" and that is why we are so completely, idiotically happy. To be sure we have a record of events, but that is not history. And everybody knows the distinction between fame and notoriety. But when you come to think about it, how could we help ourselves, with such impediments as Jeff Davis, Ebony Twichell and Nosegay Mainzer! Why, Herrick's Hospital for Mental Misfits would be handicapped by them.

In Freshman year we were right in our element; we fairly reveled in our freshness. In fact, we did little else, except to hold a class supper in Westfield, which was managed by Bell. We know him better now, and he doesn't manage as much as he once did.

Our Sophomore year was a repetition of the first one. We did do one brilliant thing, when we sneaked up to Brattleboro to break up Ninety-Six's supper and—didn't. But we had a lovely time, and it cost us only ten dollars apiece.

We all managed to get through Junior year, but it required a good deal of scientific cribbing. Even George Stevens Fairbanks is with us, and likewise the all-around Bish., who has only a term of Tip's essence to take over again.

So here we are—Seniors. What a case of mistaken identity! Imagine Cupe Osgood and Ikey Compton trying to be dignified; conceive, if you can, of Booth, Roelker and Coolidge ever being more than sub-Freshmen; and try to grasp the idea that Prentiss, Williston and the fat Hardy are Seniors. But such seems to be the case, and we have only one word more to say:

NINETY-SIX: You will fill our places when we are gone. Try to do better than we have done, and retrieve the good name of the College that we have lost.

NINETY-SEVEN: Bracc up, and do something more than talk. You really have some good men (Danforth and Cross, for instance), and if you keep on you will be just like us.

NINETY-EIGHT: You are fresh, very fresh; but it's more on account of your position, rather than of your ignorance, as is the case with Ninety-Seven. You are nothing alarming yet, except Trefethen and Foster, but you have lots of time ahead of you. Learn to play horse with Old Doc., go to sleep under Levi, and laugh at Eph's jokes, and you will come out all right. You are pretty crude, but thank goodness you are not as bad as Ninety-Seven. We would like to say more, but the clock strikes, and we make our adieu.

HISTORIES make men wise; poets, witty; the mathematics, subtle; natural philosophy, deep; morals, grave; logic and rhetoric, able to contend." Thus wrote the immortal Bacon, and behold his words come true in the famous class of Ninety-Six, the "largest class that ever entered Amherst," until Prexy scraped around and led in that emerald-hued conglomeration a year ago. Not only has the history of Ninety-Six made her members wise, but they have been wise in making her history. Behold, further, the truth of Bacon's remarks in the wittiness of our poet, Kimball, E.;

the snaky subtlety which mathematics has imparted to "Cholly" Spooner; the deep philosophical gaze on Stubby Dean's face; the grave morals of Mike Hunt, Reddy Tyler, and Mamma Dunning; and the awful contentions which we held with logic and Nungy's rhetoric, particularly the latter, in which Nungy almost flooded the whole class.

We can honestly say that we have walked away from everything since the day in Freshman year, when Houghton, in original costume, followed his feet around the track. We have always been a rising class, with the exception of Tommy Hitchcock, who, we understand, is seriously considering whether he will not rise like the moon—an hour later each day.

What is there of importance that Ninety-Six has not done? As Freshmen, we were not expected to win the rush, nor the field meet; but we got the class picture, and ate a fine class supper, while Ninety-Five heelers blew their fingers in Brattleboro cold. Then we won Heavy Gym., without Pa Brooks, too! It is Ninety-Five's great regret that there was no shape in the class which had sand and ability "to cast itself about more recklessly" than had Charlie Adams'.

Sophomore year brought with it another Kimball, as if we did not have enough. It also brought some Freshmen, to whom we resigned all our freshness. In short, we accomplished what every well regulated, intelligent Sophomore class should do. We called forth Old Doc.'s choicest collection of cuss words; we made Pike's life a burden (a commendable action, by the way); we attracted Tut's attention to us in church by our quiet, gentle, unobtrusive behavior (he kept us in chapel one morning to tell us about it); and, lastly, we have been very, very happy.

And now, to-day, we fill the Junior seats with a class that knows what a Junior should be. We have gained the confidence of the Faculty and the townspeople, especially of Kenfield, and also of the landlord of the Mansion House in Greenfield. We realize deeply the responsibility that rests upon us as Juniors. Finally, we wish to be remembered as always and unchangeably opposing the attempts to deprive a man of a man's rights. We believe and always shall believe in religious freedom, in elective worship, and personal choice. We believe in the traditions and customs of Amherst, and deplore every effort made to undo them. Therefore we inscribe ourselves unanimously for non-compulsory church and the Amherst system.

HISTORY OF NINETY-SEVEN

Class Yell.

'97 Rah, Rah!

'97 Rah, Rah!

'97, '97,

Rah! Rah! Rah!

IF ever man wished that there might be an end to the writing of history, it was when the historian of Ninety-Seven took up his task. But verily, "No meanest object is insignificant." A history should be the record of progress, but the only progress Ninety-Seven has made was in the election of Josh Billings to the Presidency—which was a step backward for Josh.

Our Freshman year was full of trials—trials without successes. Through our unwillingness to push and slug, and slug and push like Ninety-Six did, we lost the rush; but as Ninety-Eight was a small class, and all our men came out, we won our Sophomore rush. We could have won it just the same, if we had been twice as many. As the Sheriff said, What did we care for numbers? Bobby Esty and Chrysanthemum Baekus did not get killed in either of the rushes, which was an opportunity lost. Ninety-Five almost succeeded in freeing themselves from Cupe Osgood three years ago.

Well, after we had court-plastered our facial pulp, and were looking pretty respectable—for us, we thought we would get our pictures taken. We engaged Mr. Kenfield, got a lot of canes, Burrage and Hyde tried to look intelligent, and Bragg got as far away as he could from Crawford, in order to pick himself out in the picture. Everything went finely, but Swampsie and Parboiled Carrot-head Boynton were not quick enough for Ninety-Six. Who said Swampsie was a liar?

We arn't a bit like Ninety-Six. When we went on our class supper we finished the banquet at half after ten; and instead of going all around the city making noises, we went to bed so that we would be bright and fresh for our studies next day. The Springfield police are real faithful to their charge, and as they proved themselves so brave, and kept our milk-toasts from curdling, our Freshman President, Master Coles, sent each of them a menu card, worth thirty-seven cents apiece.

The College need not blame us for having Cross and Obear and Blake in our class. We can't help having hard luck, can we? Besides, the Faculty seem determined to get those fellows through College as soon as possible, even if they do not know anything except "Me Magnum!" Once Ninety-Five put us up to a wild break for emancipation by telling us to steal the tossing-blanket after the last Senior Gym. We knew Ninety-Five would not make fools of us for anything, for we are as much their protegés as Swampsie's. So we did it, but something happened. We got licked—awfully licked, right in broad daylight, and all the College saw it. We tried hard not to feel humiliated, but only the stronger ones, like Newell and Egan, succeeded.

Our class has always been a good class. We haven't any sports or gut-seekers among us; of course, Bobby Fletcher—well, he seems like a sport, but he isn't a real sport; he's only trying to be tough. It seemed several times as if we should not pull through to Sophomority, but by Eph's assiduous attention, and Levi's edifying instruction, we have left the horrors of Freshman year behind us, bringing with us not only the sad memories of past days, but also Alexander Hamilton Baekus. We will try hard to pull ourselves into working order before Ninety-Nine gets here, but it will take a long pull, and a strong pull, and a pull all together.

HISTORY OF NINETY-EIGHT

ONE page is rather small space for the history of 110 such important fellows as we are, but some day we'll have a book of our own, and then—well, we are bound to be a famous class; that was evident from the very start. But every class isn't so clear headed, and doesn't see facts so easily. We all sit together in the chapel gallery, and we are pretty regular in our attendance, too, because the boys down stairs—especially the Seniors—like to look up at us and see how nice we look when we are all together; and then, too, we don't know the Monitors very well yet. Prexy prays for us quite often, and “Old Doc.” and “Swampy,”—isn't that a funny name for a man?—treat us as though they liked us. “Old Doc.” is a real good old man, and we remain after chapel more than any other class, so he can talk to us. He says kind of naughty things to us sometimes; but as no one except Otterson and Polk ever laugh at them, we think perhaps he'll stop talking that way pretty soon.

When we first got up here every one was good and kind to us, and we smiled a good deal. But the first Saturday night something happened—they called it a cane-rush—and our ribs were sore for a week or two. It was funny, but every one said that for the first time in the history of Amherst College the Freshman class came anywhere near winning the cane-rush. Fosdick and Straight and Foster said it was because our class had so much sand; but the Seniors and Juniors said it was only because Ninety-Seven had so little. The Sophomores didn't have much of anything to say. Really the only reason we didn't win was because some one in the crowd blew a horn so loud in our ears that it scared us away. It was a mean trick to blow the horn, just as we were about to win.

The night of our first prayer meeting it rained, the first time in two months. That was unfortunate, but we went just the same. We were equal to the occasion, and one of our nicest boys—his name is Elsworth—rose and said, "The Lord reigneth; let the earth rejoice." And then some one else, Loud, maybe, said that Amherst didn't want "boggy Christians," which sounded real well, though we didn't know just what he meant. Prexy's reception to us was a great success, and we all shook our President's hand, and met his distinguished son, M. E. Gates, Jr.

So far as we can discover there is only one thing we don't know, and that is why all the College says we are fresh. We are not nearly as fresh as Ninety-Seven—the Juniors and Seniors admit that themselves—but then they say Ninety-Seven is the freshest class that can be imagined. Then next to them we are the most "verdant, blooming set of Freshmen that ever matriculated at Amherst." (You can find all those words in an unabridged book of words.)

Trefethen is one of our best men, but they called on him one night and smoked him out when he was trying to study "Potts" for Professor Wood. (He's the man you think likes you until he flunks you on an easy examination.) We are going to have our class picture taken just as often as we like, and if the Sophomores try to stop us, they'll be arrested for assault and battery or something of the sort. What business is it of the Sophs., anyhow, if we decide to sit on Walker Hall steps some day? And one thing we won't do; that's run off to Swampy with the plate when the picture is taken.

We have some fellows in our class who will make famous men some day. There is Braekett, for instance, and Stackman, and William Lysander Burbank Collins, and Arter. They are all fine boys, and when their minds are more developed they will be an honor to our class. There is Walker, too! He thinks he is pretty big now, but he will get over that, we hope, and perhaps he, too, may become an honor—we are not quite sure yet. One thing we are sure of—Ninety-Eight is here in Amherst College to stay. The Faculty know a good thing when they see it, and are trying hard to keep us; but Papa every now and then seems anxious for us to come home. However we are pulling with the Faculty, so it is all right.

Eighty=Four.

AMHERST COLLEGE invests her capital in Alumni, and naturally expects a dividend on the investment. That dividend is found in the prosperity of the classes she graduates—the success of the individual and the unity and enthusiasm of all. The mere existence of these is no more noteworthy than the performance of simple duty is a subject for praise. Less than that means no dividend, and more than that is alone entitled to special comment.

The Class of Eighty-Four is ready to be judged by this standard. We make no claim whatever to greatness. Others, doubtless, surpass our clergymen in eloquence, our lawyers in ability, our business men in shrewdness, yet Eighty-Four's affectionate, untiring enthusiasm and remarkable esprit du corps have slowly brought fame to the class, until it stands as a unique and inspiring example to other Amherst classes. Let it be understood, however, that we have not responded to the request of THE OLIO for a letter for the purpose of exploiting ourselves, and but for that matter of dividends due the Alma Mater, we might not have responded at all, for we are interested in the sort of investments Amherst College is making nowadays.

When that famous roast veal feast of the Parable was at length over, and the Prodigal Son began to feel the quiet of the old farm a bit oppressive, it is safe to conclude that, in spite of all his good resolutions, he had a sneaking, but well defined, yearning for a brandy and soda and a strong cigar. By which we wish to remark that mere temporary environment does not overcome the habits and thoughts of years. The graduate who, oppressed by a multitude of personal interests, has fallen out of touch with his Alma Mater, neglected his classmates, and forgotten the bright memories of college days, cannot atone by plucking up a little enthusiasm at a class reunion. The student who does not have occasionally a realizing sense of his duties and obligations, and who does not early learn to be aggressive and enthusiastic for class and college, in season and out of season, is not likely to suddenly acquire these qualities in after years. We of Eighty-Four learned our lessons in unity and loyalty in the early days of Freshman year, and have never forgotten them. As the classes come and go, do they, too, learn these things? Do the same influences operate? From

Amherst, where even Nature is an ally of the classroom, there ought to be no graduate whose heart does not throb at the thought of the old College. The Class of Eighty-Four feels deeply upon this subject, and in these days of "platforms," here is ours:

We believe the time has come for Amherst Alumni to arouse themselves and play a larger part in the affairs of the Alma Mater; and that the interest of the Alumni should be stimulated and maintained by more frequent reports from the trustees on financial and other topics relating to the management of the College.

We have faith in Amherst College; none in Amherst University.

We believe with President Patton that it is better to have gone to college and loafed than never to have gone at all; which means that character-making is more important than the recitation room; and to that end we consider the Amherst system of self-government has been a factor of tremendous power during the last decade. We believe that the total abandonment of this principle in the future would mean the degeneracy of manliness in the classes outgoing from Amherst.

We are opposed to dinner syndicates, into which some Alumni Associations have degenerated, but we advocate the organization of the Alumni to promote old friendships, produce new ones, encourage new comers, and most of all, to make available to the management of the College the enthusiasm, the money, and the varied wisdom which has gone from her halls to the ends of the earth.

We believe in class organization. We believe in frequent class reunions. The classmate is the best and truest friend. No effort of later years can duplicate his affection. It sprang into being from the loyal, uncalculating heart of boyhood. It was not tarnished by thought of business, policy, or money. It looks beyond failure and foible, and loves the boy of old. Forget old college strifes, fraternity or personal; wipe out old estimates of character if unfavorable; be ever ready to welcome improvement; keep in touch with classmates though scattered from Korea to the Andes.

And the dividend to Alma Mater? Well, when the graduates of Amherst have subscribed to some such creed as this, and live it, though imperfectly, there will be no question about a dividend, and then, year after year, as the New England autumn robes the valley of the Connecticut in royal colors, the bell in the old College tower, which hour by hour, muezzin like, calls to study or to prayer, will be heard by a few no longer, but across the land.

Ninety=Four.

DEAR OLIO:

"My life is like an enchanted boat
Which on a sea of bliss doth float."

At least that is what we Ninety-Four men would say if we were in your places, Ninety-Five and Ninety-Six—yes, and even Ninety-Seven and Ninety-Eight, too. You don't begin to appreciate what a seraphic life the college Senior lives, until you are suddenly torn away from that sunny region made radiant by the paternal wateheare of "Old Doc," and Prexy's mellifluous, mouth-watering, soul-satisfying phrases, and are plunged into that briny, yawning deep, "the World." Then it is you sigh with the poet,

"Oh, why should the spirit of mortal be proud?"

And echo answers, "Why?" especially if you are teaching school.

Ah, young man, that was a noble record you made in college; but, as Emerson says, "In the light of twenty-three years' experience in the art of teaching, and in the name of young manhood, I assure you that you must now get down and dig; for I always feel disgraced when a Senior fails."

And in the very rare intervals of respite that come to us of Ninety-Four in our digging, our thoughts turn toward a common Mecca—to old Amherst, where are centered our choicest memories. We would give a month's salary to be with you once more, and to enjoy again, even for a short time, your college luxuries. Do you still have the chimes—those heart-thrilling, hair-raising chimes? Yet I tell you that, with all their discords and impossible harmonies, those old chimes now seem sweeter than your most enchanting symphony. And it isn't all that kind of enchantment that distance lends, either. We long to hear once more what "Hepworth Dixon once said;" and we eagerly but vainly listen for the familiar call, "I want three good men to go to Pelham with me;" or the signal man's despairing cry, "Hello, below there!" We miss the little pleasantries clustering about that course in second-year French, and the military discipline there enforced.

Ninety-Five and Ninety-Six, we sympathize with you in the loss of Mort L. Schiff, and the consequent hegira of the Schiffie Club from Amherst to the beer gardens of Berlin. Yet we are persuaded that you are not altogether comfortless, for we are told that you have with you DeV. Hazzard, the natural-born foot ball player, who recently returned from his Greenfield buggy ride. Doubtless he gave Lewis valuable points on the position of centre rush during the fall.

Old Ninety-Four is now much scattered. Charlie Seymour, according to The Student, has gone on a Captain Kidd junketing excursion to the South

Seas; Parson MacInnes is trying to reform the Florida alligators into ways of sobriety; and Pharaoh Baker is mummy hunting, and deciphering the hieroglyphs of Rameses and Potiphar amid the haunts of his ancient ancestors—pleasant prospect for a medical missionary, isn't it?

“Of course”—“Of course;” but I haven't time to tell you how much flesh Shorty Mitchell has lost on account of hard work in the New York Law School; or how Appie teaches French, German and Geography in the “E. S. B.” (the class will please bound Englewood); or about Hayes, who has shut down his automatic, self-made introduction factory and started in the insurance business. No, I haven't time, but you can ask “Eva,” Principal Evans of the A. H. S. I suppose “Eva” is just as modest and demure as ever. We are glad he is with you.

But wherever we are, dear OLIO, be assured that as our thoughts turn back to Amherst College (and they continually do turn back), they always centre around the cardinal principles which are so dear to every Amherst man who has felt their force—self-government and open-handed, genuine fair play.

You have gained a point in your struggle for non-compulsory attendance at church, and that is a great victory. In the end, if you are steadfast to your purpose, you will win the whole field in this line. But more important by far than any question of chapel or church attendance at the present time is the question of the trustworthiness of Amherst students. Your honored ex-President entrusted you with the power to govern yourself; yet, though not a single instance was cited in which you had abused your trust, that power was taken from you. Continue the fight for your principles; show yourselves men; avoid the suspicion of untrustworthiness; and sooner or later you will receive your trust again.

We of Ninety-Four are with you in the struggle; we are daily hoping and praying that those obstacles which block the way to a return of self-government and a spirit of fair play among you may be “gently but firmly removed from your midst,” and that right speedily.

We are glad to learn that civil service reform has supplanted the spoils system for monitors, and that the present members of the College will have the privilege of giving financial support to Zion's Chapel and to the National Home for Cannibalized Missionaries four times as often as we did.

Best wishes for a successful Junior Prom.

Regards to Peanut John and George Merritt.

Very loyally,

LUTHER E. SMITH.

Our Freshman Banquet.

ON the evening of February 3, 1893, little crowds of Ninety-Six men might have been seen disappearing into an old barn near North Amherst, beside the New London Northern railroad tracks. At about 8 o'clock they emerged in a body and quickly marched to the crossing just as the collection of pipes, wheels and box ears and a whistle (sarcastically termed by the management of the above-named railroad as a train), emerged from the darkness that is so common about 8 o'clock around Amherst and its vicinity. When the jubilant van of Ninety-Six men entered the commodious ear, they discovered something, viz.: Ten Sophomores, headed by that Prince of Wind, Bert Pratt, with Jeff. Davis, as usual, bringing up in the rear.

As you may imagine, the ride to Miller's Falls was a trifle exciting. Women screamed and strong men fainted, while the brigand in charge of the train, more often and erroneously called the conductor, quietly slipped out to the back platform and had a couple of fits. When the Falls were reached we disembarked. Just here is where "Man-not-afraid-of-his-mouth" Pratt made a fatal mistake.

In some way the brilliant idea penetrated his dense inner consciousness that we were going to Brattleborough, Vt., and he concluded that such being the case, he and his gang would go, too. The idea was a very laudable one, but his major premise was a trifle wrong. No objection being raised by us, the Sophomores dashed away into the night toward the green hills of Vermont. But Jimmie Lawson didn't dash as much as he might. He fell off the rear platform, and having concealed himself in the baggage ear of our train, went on to Greenfield unobserved.

We were ready for the supper when it came, and for three hours we ate, talked and smoked. Having done our duty in these lines, we turned our attention to other matters. Perry went on a foraging expedition, but was soon nipped in the bud by the strong hand of the law. Olmie and Kauffman took a few photographs of the places of interest, and Jaggs caused confusion at a boarding school by toying with the owner of the place. The rest of us played cards with each other, Copenhagen with the waitresses, and horse with Proprietor Schoff.

That's about all there was to it. Oh! we did have a few conversations with Mr. Schoff later, and there was some talk about us in Greenfield. But it wasn't very expensive, and we all agree that it was worth every cent we paid.

Freshman Song.

O, COME, my jolly boys! to-night
    Bid dark-winged care depart ;
In merry song, in jovial joke,
    Let lightsome be each heart.
From puzzling Greeian hieroglyph,
    From Rome's patois uncouth,
From mammals, mammoths, mastodons,
    Hold every thought aloof.

In peaceful sleeping Amherst Town
    Full many a Soph to-night
Will wander through the realms of dreams
    Until the dawn of light.
Perhaps in dreams he'll spot some Fresh,
    But in the morn he'll find
He failed to see the Freshman green—
    His eyes were color-blind.

Then up, my boys ! bid laughter eome,
    Let's make the old walls shake ;
We're free to-night, shout out the song
    Until old Terra quakes.
Three rousing cheers for Ninety-Six,
    Let's give them with a vim.
In friendship's bond we'll ever stand

Sophomore Supper.

"MEETING OF '96,
In Prof. Cowles' room, at 7 o'clock sharp,
TO-NIGHT, FRESHMAN SUPPER."

GHUS read the notice that was circulated through the Sophomore Class at chapel, Friday morning, January 12, 1894. All day each member of the class seemed brimful of happiness. "How do you suppose they got on to them?" and "Won't it be out of sight to break up their supper?" were the sentiments expressed on every side.

Night closed in (this is a habit night has), and promptly at 7 o'clock, as the chapel bell's last stroke quickened the pace of some tardy grailers* toward the weakly prayer meeting, one hundred and ten enthusiastic Sophomores were huddled in that recitation room. "The purpose of this meeting," began Prexy Staples, "is to devise some more effective means of breaking up the Freshman banquet.

Fifteen minutes later Prexy again spoke: "Of course, fellows, this is all a bluff. We go on our own supper to-night." In columns of twos, noiselessly out of the chapel, under the body of saints above just then singing Hymn 96, went the jubilant crowd. Down past Old Doc.'s anthropometric joint, through the fields, knee-deep with snow, up the bank to the railroad track we went, just as the special train glided down the rails and then stopped. A grand rush, a rousing "A la, la, boom!" and we were off.

No one knew where we were going. Few cared. The essential thing was the going. A quick investigation showed that Loveland had been lost during the hasty shuffle. Cards (purchased before the Y. M. C. A. invested in them), story telling and smoking, made the time pass quickly. At 11 o'clock our train stopped, and we had reached our destination, Nashua, N. H. As we marched up the deserted streets of that staid old town our yells and our songs astonished the natives and paralyzed the foreigners.

We do not intend to burden this travesty on literature with a labyrinthine diagnosis of what was on the menu, for it mattered not whether we absorbed

“all hots” or masticated Pistache’s ice cream. We were in Nashua, not for epicurean delights, but to see Sabrina. As we entered the banquet hall every man struggled to get the first glimpse of the goddess, but in vain; she was not there. A feeling of disappointment was plainly visible in the faces of all. But how sudden the transformation! A faint cry; a gesture. In an instant every man was on his feet, a death-like silence followed; then from a hundred throats came one long, tumultuous shout. It was a cry of triumph. We saw in her not an image formed by artist’s hands, but the embodiment of all our longings, hopes, fears, and struggles. Cheer followed cheer, and shouts followed one another. She was there.

After the last entré had disappeared and Mike Hunt’s perivisceral cavity was filled, we began the post-prandial exercises. Prexy Staples grinned in anticipation, for the toast list in his hand contained a list of the finest after-dinner speakers in New England. Dickey Rollins started the ball rolling with a history of Sabrina. Dickie’s remarks were short and very pointed. He was followed by E. Kimball—not E. T., H. L., or W. E.—but simply E. Kimball. He was a poet, whose production came under the head of “Unfledged Literati.” Cleveland Sandie recited several funny stories with his usual hilarity and ability, so much unlike all legitimate humorists. Harkness, he of the auburn foretop, told in a charming manner the way “To woo a Woman.” Jaggar touched in his witty flight every glorious achievement of the Class, save one—the picture racket. Eddie Bancroft, in his peculiar manner, spoke from experience on “Brains, their Use and Abuse.” “Stubby” Dean had a subject just his size, “Sports.” His masterful exposition is now in the hands of the Y. M. C. A., and next year will be printed in the Handbook, along with other talks for Freshmen. “In Medias Res,” by our Riley (not J. Whitcomb, but our Springfield Republican Riley), was handled in a most deserving way. The self-made, well-rounded Emmie, the Chauncey Depew of the future, gave us some of the latest discoveries on “Necessary Evils” of Amherst. He proved himself a necessity, but not an evil. Thomas Belated Hitchcock told us of the sorrow attendant on flunked exams., from personal experience.

At 8:30 we were climbing College Hill. We had seen Sabrina, and she was ours. Happy and contented we stopped before the chapel. Inside, Tip was praying for “our absent ones,” when on the frosty air rang out:

A la, la, bix!
Vive la Amherst!
Ninety-Six!”

Tune, "The Debutante."

In Amherst seat of classie lore
We've left our every care,
And here we've come with jollity
To all our foes' despair;
We'll spend the night right merrily,
Our parting be at dawn ;
Till then we'll seek the blessing of Sabrina's beauteous form.
For she's our great divinity,
And at her feet we fall ;
And as we pledge our loyalty,
Praise we her one and all.

CHORUS.

Sabrina, greatly powerful !
All hail our mighty queen ;
Behold your subjects at your feet
Who kneel with humble mien.
Now shed on us your blessing,
Let others rave in vain,
But we will praise you queen forevermore.

Success was won when'er we strove,
Illustrious we stand ;
The mighty class of Ninety-Six
Is known throughout the land.
We've conquered every obstacle
That in our path has lain ;
And now we hold unswerving course
Still higher fame to gain.
But these are paltry conquests
Unworthy of a song,
Compared with praise of chaste Sabine,
Whom we hymn loud and long.

Then let us fill our glasses up
And drink one heartfelt toast,
To Ninety-Six all glorious
And to her mighty boast.
Sabrina, queen of deities,
Our hope, our love, our joy !
May e'er she be our guardian
And we her praise employ.
We'll spend the night right merrily,
Our parting be at dawn ;
And let each voice and heart unite
As we uplift our song.

CHORUS.

CHORUS.

Sabrina.

Sabrina, beauteous queen!”

EAR NINETY-FIVE:

We really think it would be most unkind to let you leave College without telling you of our divinity, Sabrina. You may have heard of her before, for she has been quite well-known in College for several years. It is also possible that you may have attempted to investigate her past history and present circumstances; but we feel sure that you could have secured only meagre and unsatisfactory reports of her past life, and we know that her loyal subjects, Ninety-Six, are the only ones who are acquainted with her present circumstances. She has taught us to be unselfish, so we will give you her history. Your henchmen Ninety-Seven, may also read and profit, for they will probaby never be inspired by her fostering care.

Sabrina, the myth, was a river-goddess in Britain, presiding over the River Severn. Sabrina, the real, is a statue of a fair young maiden, with beautiful features. She sits, with charming pose, upon the river's bank, as if listening to the whisper of some god in the rustling of the leaves overhead or the murmur of the water below. To give a few prosy facts—she is made of zinc, bronzed over; her weight is about three hundred and fifty pounds, and the height of the figure about four and one-half feet. She was presented to the College in 1857 by the Hon. Joel Hayden of Haydenville, and during her stay in College, stood on a low stone pedestal, midway between North College and the “Octagon.” The statue formed the centre-piece of a beautiful botanical garden, which was maintained by the College at an annual expense of $150. Here Sabrina posed for years, gracing the campus, giving a classic touch to Nature's beauty in the flowers, and bearing with modesty the admiration and compliments of students and visitors. Little did she then dream of the important part she was to play in the history of Ninety-Six.

There came a time when Sabrina's classic beauty failed to appeal to the hardened student heart, and one cold morning, about 1870, she appeared with a big shawl pinned round her fair shoulders. "Professor Charlie" removed this, but the signal for all sorts of pranks had been given, and during the winter Charlie had to unrobe Sabrina several times. This sport soon waned, and Sabrina resumed her peaceful life until 1876, when she appeared one morning all besmeared with black paint. The student body could see no joke in such dastardly work, and having discovered the wielder of the brush they compelled him to leave College. This sentiment was not lasting, however, for soon afterwards, when the Faculty expelled a student for rushing, his fellows showed their disapprobation by giving Sabrina a thick coat of whitewash. From that time until 1880 she was painted and bedaubed several times, once with hot tar. But the Faculty endured with patience, and "Professor Charlie" did his best to keep Sabrina fair and smiling.

In 1880, the goddess played her first part in class rivalry, by appearing one morning with a rag baby, labelled "'81," resting quietly in her arms. Later, she was discovered clasping twin dolls. Then the students would remove her from the pedestal at night and in the morning she would be found buried to her chin in the ground, or perched upon some professor's desk, or lying prostrate in a ditch. Her office as class divinity began with Eighty-Two, who took her to a class supper at New London. Eighty-Three threw her into the college well, from which rough treatment she now bears a scar upon her cheek.

This was too much for the patience of our august Faculty, and they consigned Sabrina to "Professor Charlie," with orders to cut her up and sell her for old zinc. But Charlie had a tender heart. "Kill a woman!" said the old negro to an OLIO editor, as he was telling of Sabrina. "I couldn't do it! Think of cuttin' a woman to pices! It 'ud be better to drown her in the Freshman; but I couldn't do that nuther. I jes couldn't kill her, so I kep' her hid."

So Sabrina disappeared, the botanical garden became a memory, and the stone pedestal was transferred to its present resting place behind the Barrett "gym." But in 1888 the class of Ninety learned that Sabrina was still "alive," and after some exploring found her, all dust covered, in "Professor Charlie's" barn. She was immediately removed to Mr. Guernsey's barn, to await Ninety's class supper. When the time came, and she was being taken to the New London station by Mr. Guernsey, four Ninety-One men, one of whom is now an instructor in College, kidnapped her and carried her to the house of C. O. Wells, '91, in Hatfield. Ninety-One praised and toasted her, and then bequeathed her to Ninety-Three, who enjoyed her benign presence at their Freshman and Sophomore banquets. This brilliant class, no doubt, intended to bequeath her in turn to you, dear friends of Ninety-Five. but a foxy member of Ninety-Four superintended matters, and soon after Ninety-Three's Sophomore banquet, Sabrina transferred her affections to Ninety-Four, who toasted her praises at their Sophomore supper in Brattleborough. Ninety-Three spent hundreds of dollars for detectives, but without result; Sabrina had jilted them.

Ninety-Six came to Amherst and immediately swore allegiance to the fair goddess. She failed to appear at our Freshman banquet in Greenfield, but she had not rejected our homage, and on January 12th of this year, she graced the memorable banquet at Nashua, N. H. How we hailed our queen! How we sang her praises! And how our hearts beat as we saw her leave us and go out into the cold night! We have not seen her since, but we know she is still watching over Ninety-Six. Ninety-Eight! We caution you to be ready to take the oath of allegiance, and to serve the beautiful Sabrina with true hearts. She will not prove false to you if you are true to her and keep your eyes on Ninety-Seven.

Of course, we do not suppose that you of Ninety-Five care very much about a mere mass of old zinc, but we thought you would like to hear a little about its history, and we can assure you that it is a true story. You and Ninety-Seven are very unfortunate in missing so important a part of Amherst life, but then, you don't care anything about that, and besides it was not your fault. We are glad if you are happy with each other.

LITERARY DEPARTMENT

To Charles W. Parkhurst, '66.

THE years are not yet thirty since thou saidst
Farewell to Alma Mater, and went forth
Into the thronged world to dare and do.
Ne'er thought she then a nation's gratitude
Would one day crown thee; and thy name be thrilled
From sea to sea, as champion of Truth.
But thou didst find Iniquity, brazen-faced,
Safe stalking through a cowering city; Fraud,
Corruption—all the hellish band defying right,
Nor was there one to do them godly battle.
Then stoodst thou forth, a David 'gainst Goliath,
And Justice nerved thy arm. The strife was long,
And yet is on; but Victory smiles on thee.
Thy mother calls down blessings on her son.

Professor Garman.

MAN whom wisdom's children long
To know; and knowing come to trust;
And trusting learn to love. He strikes
The deepest, noblest chords within
Our hearts, and teaches us to know
Ourselves, our fellows and our God.

The Senate Meeting.

THE first meeting of the Amherst College Senate for the year 1894-'95 was held on the evening of October 30, at No. 10 Walker Hall.

The meeting was called to order by the president, M. E. Gates, and as the secretary was absent, the roll call and reading of the minutes of the last meeting devolved upon the president. Upon calling the roll, although President Gates' name was the only one answered to, the president declared that to be no reason for postponing the meeting, and announced that he should proceed in the usual order of business.

The first thing was the election of officers for the ensuing year, and the president nominated himself for the office. There being no objections, President Gates declared himself re-elected for another year, and a committee of one was appointed to escort the newly-elected official to the chair at the other end of the table. As the president's time was precious, he suggested that all other elections be dispensed with, kindly offering to take the duties of the offices upon himself. Upon putting the question, the vote was declared unanimous, and a loud cheer for the new officers followed. The Senate then went into executive session, and the following business was transacted:

Voted, To hold regular meetings twice a year, instead of once a month, as formerly, the monthly meetings proving too much of a strain for the member.

Voted, That special meetings may be called at any time by summons of the president, and that all future meetings shall be held in the brick house near the library, instead of at Walker Hall.

Voted, To make an appropriation of $10 for arrears of salary due the Senate's coon detective, and to secure his services for another year.

Voted, That the price of gas supplied by members of the Senate be increased to $5.50 per hundred feet.

Voted, At 9.30, that this meeting adjourn.

Doublets.

“Il y a en français deux sortes des doublets,”

Did Monty announce to his class one day.

His dictée was cut short by one of the class,

For a Freshman eried out, his face wreathed with grins,

“Say, Professor, I'll bet it's the Grosvenor twins.”

A Soliloquy.

'Twas on an arm in Nungy's room,
Enlosed by many a pencilled square,
A hideous head with rumpiled hair,
Upon an arm in Nungy's room.
Did some one draw that horrid faee
To keep awake to meet his doom ;
Or was the artist's aim to graee
That old chair arm in Nungy's room ?

Perhaps a Goethe traced each line
Upon that poor defenseless arm,
And genius' power was the charm
That could create such form divine.
Maybe we'll see a Rubens loom,
With heaven-sent power and master's hand,

Out from the man who left his brand
On that ehair arm in Nungy's room.

Whoe'er he be, where'er he dwell,
Who drew that frightful image there,
Long may he live, to have his share
Of blessed life, and live it well.
But may some memory bring him round
Matured by this world's sun and gloom,
To see what ugly work I found
On that ehair arm in Nungy's room.

ENGLISH as she is spoke by some members of Ninety-Five is a wild and dissipated language. The other morning Jeff Davis met Bert Pratt on the street.

“Hello, Birdie, how'd the team come out yesterday?”

“Where you been, Jeff; didn't you know that we got beat? There ain't no way to make them eusses play, no how.”

“Got beat, did yer?” added Jeff, rubbing his eyes hard. “You see, I've been a secluse lately.” And Bert looked at Jeff and judged so.

A Fall in Beef.

It was a slippery morning last spring. The Amherst "scoot" stood at the "Hamp," station waiting to begin its first morning trip. The bell rang, the drivers moved. Something leisurely making its way along under the arcade suddenly quickened pace. It dashed out upon the tracks, and was seen to be that corpulent composite of causticity, confidence and conceit—Hardy, '95. There was a swift slide over the slippery planks, a wild waving of book-laden arms, and His Rotundity went down with a crash that put on the air-brakes and stopped the train. The conductor wildly called for a freight car in which to gather the remains; the brakeman, oft a recipient of Hardy's spare popcorn and cigars, wrung his hands and wept; and a New York broker was about to telegraph his partner to buy up all the beef in sight and hold it for a rise, when the "remains" calmly rose and blandly surveyed the distracted crowd. Then he mounted the car platform, and as the train moved out, these soothing words reached the ears of the throng: "Yea, verily, all is well! the king lives! let us not weep, but let us leap for joy!"

A Sophomore's Letter.

MY DEAR FATHER:

Yours asking me to promise you (puff), that I will not smoke while in college ("this is a dandy pipe, Brad,") received. I would be willing to sign the pledge you ask, (puff, puff,) since I do not smoke at present, only I do not think it shows sufficient paternal trust in my filial affection (puff, puff,) that you ask me to do such a thing.

Believe me (puff),

Your obedient son,

K. — — H.

Literary Idolatry.

SOME folks love to worship Shakespeare,
Some love Byron, some love Homer;
Others bow the knee to Milton,
Or to that Italian roamer.
Harkness all of these despises;
"Why, they're hardly worth the pelf."
But he burns adoring incense
At an altar to—himself.

A Meditative Song.

BY ROBBINS, '96.

My thoughts are so profound, that their profundity is immeasurable,
My mystic meditations deal with themes obscure and terrible,
I think and then I meditate; then meditate and think,
And then I tell whome'er I meet how much I love to think.

I think about myself, and me, and Robbins, I, and ego;
Again about myself, and then about how much I know.
I know it all, and even just a little else beside;
And with my knowledge and my thoughts I'm wholly satisfied.

Yes, yes, I'm very proud of what I say, and think, and know,
And am, and feel, and hear, and see, and read and learn; but oh!
This world's too small for me—I fain would soar away,
And tell the men on Mars how much I know and think and say.

At length, if I but keep at work, and think hard all the time,
I'll have it all thought up; and then, how odd and how sublime,
To never rest, but keep at work as hard as e'er I can,
And go, and what I have thought up, unthink it all again!

A Sophomore's Toilet.

WHEN THE OLIO began its benevolent career, there were several things it resolved to investigate. One was the matter of the scraggy locks that are wont to adorn the head of Benjamin Kendall Emerson, Jr. The result of our inquiry fills us with horror. Curling irons are all right for the other sex, and might, perhaps, be allowed in small boys of the Fountleroy type. But that such a worthy young man as Mr. Emerson should be so fatally addicted to this dreadful habit seems to us to be the height of folly. Wear your hair pompadour, like Merriam, '98; or follow the example of Nelson Kingsland, and don't wear it at all. Do anything you please with your hair, Kendall, but don't, for the love of heaven, tempt Nature with a curling iron.

STURDY SOPH—"Oh, no, only one Freshman had his leg broken in the blanket rush. It's the tree rush that is most dangerous."

SWEET SMITH SENIOR—"Yes, I should think there would be quite a number of limbs broken in a tree rush."

A Summer Idyl.

“ His only books were woman’s looks,
And folly’s all they’ve taught him.”

How else can the following be explained? It was current last summer among the passengers on the Aurania that a certain Metcalf—with a dimple in his chin—was one evening promenading the deck with a young Scotch lassie, whose blue eyes and rosy cheeks were altogether too lovely for her cavalier’s strength of mind. At any rate, when two plotters came up to them with a friendly air, offering them two sandwiches, this young man, with an innocence and lack of suspicion which would be becoming in a Freshman, but which is supposed to be entirely lacking in a Junior, hastens to accept the sandwiches, and gives one to his companion. But, alas! these were not the sweet, juicy ham sandwiches he had expected—oh, no! They were made of good bread, but inside the bread lay concealed the toughest, leathery old letter paper that the boat could afford. By trying hard for a minute or two after his first bite, Metcalf collected his beauty-scattered wits and understood the reason for his companion’s departure. He knew the truth and sought his berth. Thus was one bud of friendship nipped ere it could blossom into the full red rose of reciprocated love. Pity Loud didn’t get some sandwiches!

Dante on a Bust.

MONTY was telling his class about Dante:

Homer and Shakespeare and Dante’s the order;

There in the corner his bust you may see.”

Here he stopped short, interrupted, as someone
Asked, with a coolness that bordered on crust,

“ Can you, Professor, inform us all whether Dante was ever before on a bust ? ”

Bell!

THERE once was a Senior named Bell,

Who thought him particular —

In the Senior elections,

He missed his connections,

Which took from his head its large swell.

Don't forget

THAT with all his faults, Professor Montague is a generous contributor to our athletic teams.

That Gussie Post has been known to go to church twice in one term.

That there was never a more precious lot of darlings than occupy the Freshman gallery now in chapel.

That Sunday at Amherst is this year, more than last year, a day for doing one's duty because it is right, and not just because the Faculty require it.

That it was not the President of the Faculty who said, "I would rather be right than be President."

That a leopard can't change his spots, and Ninety-Seven can't really help being the freshest class in College.

That "Pike" Morris is the only man on the Faculty who conscientiously believes that he knows all about everything.

That Ninety-Six, as represented by Sammie Hayes, has accomplished not a little by keeping "Rollo" Backus, '97, from posing before the College at the organ from morning to morning.

That though we may lose Ninety-Five next year, we shall still have with us Spooner, Robbins, Ellinwood, Danforth, Cross and Straight.

And above all, gentle reader, do not forget that Ninety-Six publishes but one OLIO.

A Lost Opportunity.

A YOUNG lady of the town had a very pretty friend visiting her last spring. They were out walking one afternoon, and one of THE OLIO Board overheard the following conversation as Sophomore Cross passed by. The stranger spoke first: "Who is that handsome young man that just passed us? I think he is perfectly lovely."

"That is Mr. Cross," the friend replied, "one of the most popular men in his class."

"How nice! What lovely young men you have here at Amherst," was the stranger's reply; and THE OLIO editor, sick at heart, dropped farther to the rear, and around the first corner.

Now we know that Cross will give us no peace until we tell him who the young ladies were. We will tell him right here that the whole matter is a base fabrication—nothing of the kind ever took place—and we sympathize with him that it is so.

Business Manager,

To Mr. F. L. Clayson,
Amherst College

Roelker!

In Amherst town there dwells a freak,
A. Roelker is his name;
One leg is like a spider's leg,
The other is the same.
Now these two legs are good and long
As we just now have said;
But if ought there is in Roelker else,
'Tis surely not a head.

Barnes Wants Spanish.

SHEDSIE BARNES TO PREXY—"President Gates, I should like to take a course in Spanish, owing to constant call for the use of it in my father's business."

PREXY TO BARNES—"I am exceedingly sorry, Mr. Barnes, that we have no professor in Spanish. The fact is, I have been looking for the right man to teach modern languages here for some time, but I have not found one yet."

Since Reid has Run the Co-op.

My name is Reid of Worcester,
I'm the John Reid, you know;
The only, none-such, nonpareil,
Unique and comme-il-faut;
My name stood for a lot, but now
New honors round it group,
Since Richie came and asked me if
I'd like to run the Co-op.

My college course, I don't know why,
Had thus far been a fake;
That four that almost never came,
That prize I didn't take;
But now again I'll lift my head
And unto no one stoop,
Since Richie came and asked me if
I'd like to run the Co-op.

At last my joy and happiness
Is just about complete;
So you your fours, and prizes, and Class offices can keep;
When'er I think of what I am,
I want to give a whoop,
Especially since I've been asked
To come and run the Co-op.

'Twas Business.

THE College Y. M. C. A. is to be congratulated on its first attempt in a literary line. Its hand-book was a valuable addition to the College periodicals, and doubtless proved an appreciated assistant to many a puzzled Freshman. By far the most striking feature of that priceless work was the matter in its advertising columns, setting forth not only the merits of the Co-op. laundry, and other popular resorts, but also directions where to find the best pipes, tobacco, cigarettes and playing cards. The Y. M. C. A. seems to have felt what would appeal most strongly to college men. As a suggestion for next year, we would offer an appendix, giving the pass word at Bruno's and a Students' Guide to Holyoke.

A "Pastile."

THEY eat pumpkin pie. Through the window shaded by the sweet old honey suckles the light sifts in mottled flecks. The sad tone of the cow bells in the distance floats in, mingled with the sharp chirps of the cricket, and the deep intonations of the weary bull-frog.

They eat pumpkin pie. The old room is fast darkening in the dusky twilight. The pictures above the mantel look down in gloomy grandeur at the two. Far away the faithful watch-dog howls at the rising moon. The dark comes on apace.

They eat pumpkin pie. It is quite dark now. Only the dim shadows in the room and the night. He takes her hand and smiles. She sees the risibilities through the gloom, and answers with a sigh. Pumpkin pie may fail, but love is eternal.

A Mere Matter of Pronunciation.

(SCENE—A fraternity house parlor during "rushing" season. Mr. John S. Johnston, '98, is the centre of attraction).

MR. G. — "Is your home in Massachusetts, Mr. Johnston?"

JOHN S. — "No, I live in Chicago."

MR. G. — "Oh, indeed! Then perhaps you know L. C. Stone?"

JOHN S. — "No, I've never met her. Chicago is a large place, you know, and of course there's more than one girl there."

Tulips.

Why does Pike so often go,
Go so gladly—never sadly,
Through the rain or through the snow,
O'er the mountain to South Hadley?

"Oh, I went to botanize,
After flowers to press," he said,
Yes, we know he's found a prize,
For he presses tulips red.

If there are still four more Pratts to come to Amherst, why not consolidate with Brooklyn and call this Pratt Institute.

A Ballard.

LET chaperone and matron prim
Come listen to this festive strain,
And learn once more how man and maid
Make all their foolish efforts vain.

When Autumn's hand had smeared the leaves
With Nature's most luxuriant hues,
And foot ball ruled the land once more,
While Levi aired his windy views,
One fellow's mind was ill at ease;
He knew a girl as fair as she
For whom the Greek and Trojan host Fought ten long years. And now to be

Once more with her was his desire;
But she was 'sconced in Holyoke's halls,
And well he knew the rigid rules
That govern all within those walls.
The only place where he could gain
A meeting with his lady fair,
Was in the public drawing room
Before the matrons gathered there.

“ Now, by my halidome,” quoth Shake—
For thus this amorous youth was known—
“ I'll not be balked by petty rules
Like school boys, nor shall you, my own,
My lovely Esmerelda Ann. I have a scheme
By which methinks we'll have a stroll,
Beneath the autumn-tinted groves
Where matrons go not, and the soul

Is free to climb the heights of bliss."
Now let us see what was the plan
The crafty Ballard had evolved
To see his Esmerelda Ann.
The rules say thusly: "Not a girl
Who's in our charge shall go to drive
Or walk, without a chaperone,
Unless engaged." But, man alive!

If that rule held throughout the world,
Few would there be to walk alone
And talk of future happiness,
When they should be each other's own.
'Tis clear injustice. Now rejoice
To see how Ballard worked his bluff.
He went to Holyoke. She was in;
Then when a nymph in accents gruff

Had summoned her; with rapturous joy
He kissed the maid. And as the shrew,
With purpose foiled, rushed out in haste,
He and his frightened Ann went too.
But she forgave his ardent act,
And let us hope enjoyed the call,
While as for Shake, his bliss came high,
Yet, as he says, was worth it all.

Now, chaperone and matron prim,
If you're awake after my burst,
Take my advice. Keep out of sight,
We all defy you; do your worst.

A Question for J. W. Loud.

CAN a handsome young man, 167.63 cm. in length, with a force of ardent love constantly applied to a susceptible maiden's ears through a period of three weeks of travel, plus one week on board ship, generate a reciprocal feeling in her heart, strong enough to resist the centrifugal force of two college years of separation, with no acceleration except that due to daily letters?

A New Field for Alumni.

WHILE we are aware that it is not customary to put Alumni notices in this volume, yet when a recent graduate, well known to the College, distinguishes himself or opens up a new field of effort for college men, we feel that his work should be recognized. One man in the class of Ninety-Four has taken a course which at once puts on him the stamp of genius. We refer to Mr. Charles Gakes Seymour and his shipping before the mast as a common sailor.

Why should not Amherst enter the field here laid open before her? Why cannot this institution become to the common sailor, what Annapolis is to the officer? On a practice ship, safely moored on the billowy Freshman, we could have gym. drills in nautical exercises. With a four years' course for regular sailors, and a special department for the training of stokers and wipers, the College would take on new strength and life.

Mr. Seymour, we thank you. As you munch your salt horse and hard-tack, or keep a lonely watch for whales and icebergs, think of what you have done. If an irate mate smite you on one cheek with a belaying pin, as you turn to him the other, reflect that your Alma Mater owes you a great debt. All hail the noble Seymour, who has solved the problem of future occupation for so many of us.

To "Leland" Hardy.

Thou lovely cherub, Leland mine,
With form divine;
Sweet flower of innocence and love
Dropped from above
To scent this weary earth of ours
With perfume showers,
Why didst thou bring thy presence here,
Where genius helps thee not a whit?
Waste not thy sweets on desert air,
Nor honeyed words on Amherst Lit.
Seek broader fields and wider fame,
As suits thy name;
Go out to conquer and to rule
As Fortune's tool;
Let not thy genius and thy power
Lie hid an hour.
Yet, after all, despite thy wit—
Thou would be Juvenal, whose brass
Shows in thy fiery locks—we think
That thou'rt a useless, viscous mass.

Levi on the Olio.

NOW about THE OLIO! I hope if any of you who are at present listening to my words ever have the chance to write for this publication, you will scorn criticising personal defects, or any personal characteristics that may be a trifle conspicuous about the person. Because a man is red-headed is no reason for his classmates to pick upon him. God made him red-headed, and if you laugh at the red hair, you laugh at God. I say this, not because I think you need any words of advice upon the subject, but simply because two or three instances of this kind have come under my observation of late, and I have deemed this a proper time to say a few words on the subject, knowing that they will be taken in the same spirit as that in which they are given. We will continue the translation at the line where we left off at our previous recitation.

LONDON policemen to Cupe Osgood: "We've got monkeys in our Zoo with better looking faces than yours."

Our Worthy Official,

Mr. Booth, of the class of Ninety-Five, entered upon his onerous duties as tennis director with a zest and foresight that showed him to be the man for the place. He told the reporter who came down from Boston to interview him the day after his election, that he considered his position quite a responsible one for one man to hold, and that he really ought to have Compton and Fairbanks as his co-workers, because there was quite an affinity between the three of them, which would have made work easy. He had not yet decided where he would buy the tennis balls, but he probably would give the contract to the Co-op, both to help it along and to encourage Johnny Reid, who has just been taken in as junior partner. As to his office, Mr. Booth said he had secured quarters in Walker Hall, and would soon remove thither, where he would be open to callers every evening till half after ten. As to the letter to Yale, he had not yet decided upon its purport, but he certainly should depart from the old rut, and hoped a new system of arranging the schedules would be in vogue hereafter—if hard work could accomplish such a result. Mr. Booth is always glad to meet representatives of the press and give them any information in his power.

To Durgin.

OH! Durgin, you wild, western, wind pouch,
Chuck-full of Chicago and brag,
Cease shooting off mouthfuls of nothings,
And tie up your face with a rag.

Go hump* yourself straightway to Adams',
A place of which maybe you've read,
Just get a big package of Bromo,
And take down the swell in your head.

EXTRACT from one of Richie's informal sermons: "There are some human beings who are the scum, the 'chips,' as it were, that float on the surface of human society. And, gentlemen, you can always tell a 'chip' when you see it." Sophomore Danforth wonders why the class smile, and if he ought to stay in a college where the boys say "darn" and laugh at Richie's jokes.

ONE evening on deck, last summer, Sanderson was unable to sing below G. The ship's surgeon explained it by the fact that Sandy's supper came up to G.

To the Convent Girl.

SWEET maid, to these bleak hills allured
To drink thy fill at learning's fount;
Fair being, in whose soul I ween
Minerva's shrine is paramount;
Do me this grace, sweet lady mine,
To give my burdened heart relief,
Grant me a hearing, only list
To my o'erpowering, hopeless grief.

I meet thee oft in aimless stroll
And view thy passage from afar,
As longingly as sage of old
E'er watched the rising of his star.
In concert hall I see thee oft,
And looking, lose all thought of song,
Or muse, or anything except
The charms that to thyself belong.

Thy presence, too, at vesper-tide
Enshrines the spot, and all the hour
My homage seeks thy heart alone
My soul is fast in Cupid's power.
Thus am I tossed with love of thee,
Thus has my sorrow daily grown:
Now give, I pray thee, beauteous maid,
Good heed unto that heart of stone,

And see if thou hast not one glance,
One thought for me. I wait thy word
With anxious heart. Can'st not bestow
One look on me? Hast thou not heard?
Thou can'st not. Then alas for me!
What visions now must take their flight.
I blame thee not, but thou hast made
Of me a most heart-broken wight.

Go on thy course toward wisdom's goal,
But when at last eute Cupid's bow
Shall pierce thy heart, then, then alone
Can'st thou my present anguish know.

An Apology.

IN behalf of about sixty members of Ninety-Six who went down to Springfield one cold night last Winter Term, THE OLIO wishes to offer a humble apology to the class of Ninety-Seven. We were very sorry to spoil your fun. It made our hearts congeal with pity as we heard the poor, flustered proprietor of the Glendower pour out his tale of woe to the reporters. That extra bill for police protection was another stroke for which we were responsible, and which we sincerely hope you will pardon.

Our purpose in going was to protect, rather than to annoy you. Why should such a lot of children have been allowed to run loose in the streets of so wicked a city as Springfield? When we heard that you were gone, and fully comprehended the magnificence of your scheme, our course was plain. For the good of the College, such a jollification as our class had at Greenfield must not be repeated. We wisely concluded that with sixty Sophomores in town no Freshman aggregation would wax so very jubilant, even after a fifty-cent supper and a whole menu of milk toasts. It was too bad, too, to take up so much of your special car to ourselves, but it had to be done to preserve order. Altogether, we congratulate ourselves that Ninety-Seven had a model Freshman supper, and that our class did its duty nobly as an escort.

And now just a word to the children of Ninety-Eight. If you want to make another such glorious success of your supper, be sure to have it near home, and to start at such a time that you can be pursued on regular trains. Take a few platoons of the Amherst militia or the Aggie guards along to protect your festive board, and all will be lovely. Tell the hotel clerk to be sure to give all reporters a full account of the proceedings that the morning papers may spread about your prowess. This is a master stroke. Follow these instructions and you can make Ninety-Seven green with envy at your success. Tu Olio's blessing go with you, my children.

The Plugger.

Who sits from morn till late at night
His eye upon the page,
And squanders youth and social grace
To gain in knowledge age?—
The plugger.

Who stands so pale before his class
And pulls a glorious four,
And when exams. send havoc round
Is first to leave the floor?—
The plugger.

Who prides himself upon a key
Which points to brain alone,
And, culture's pigmy, mounts at last
The learned commencement throne?—
The plugger.

Who makes for life and all its joys
A mere existence do,
And leaves the world no heritage?
'Tis sad to tell, but true—
The plugger.

That's Critchlow!

A FIGURE long and lank and thin,
A faec with an inspired grin,
A mouth that makes a horrid din,
That's Critchlow.

A voice that sereeches all the day,
That's used to eritieise—and pray—
In faet, a most outlandish jay,
That's Critchlow.

A most conceited bag of gas,
A mixture of loud noise and brass
Jammed up together in a mass,
That's Critchlow.

Better Late than Never.

IT was the day of judgment. The odor of sulphur and phosphorus pervaded the atmosphere, and from the gloomy curtain of smoke that overspread that particular portion of the globe formerly known as Hampshire County jagged flashes of lightning darted and gleamed. Mt. Holyoke and Sugarloaf had been dislocated from their foundations and were rapidly dissolving in the boiling waters of the Connecticut. Desolation and destruction were the order of the day. The roarings of thunder, the crash of toppling hills, the hissing and steaming of the waters made a noise like pandemonium.

All living things had journeyed upward, and St. Peter was anxiously peering through the gate to see if there might yet be some belated mortal plodding toward the celestial entrance. No, not a soul.

“Porter, start the engines and close the gate.”

At this command an immense rumbling of machinery ensued, and the massive leaves of the double doors began to swing together. Nearer and nearer together they came. At that moment a faint call struck the ear of the attentive gate-keeper, and looking down along the narrow path, Peter spied a young man rushing up the steep road at the top of his speed. It was a question whether the gate would close first and shut him out from everlasting bliss. But by almost superhuman effort he reached the threshold, was grabbed by the athletic Peter, and pulled within the portal just as it closed together with a moeking crash.

Panting, trembling, but safe, the youth passed on to the First Secretary's desk.
"Your residence?" asked the dignified scribe, flourishing his quill.
"Amherst, Massachusetts, United States of America, the Earth."
"Your name?"
"Thomas B. Hitchcock."
"I thought so," murmured Peter, turning away in disgust.

The Hasn't Done Anything Since.

ROBERTS WALKER once managed a lecture course here,
And he hasn't done anything since.
'Twas a nice little job and it cost Roberts dear,
So he hasn't done anything since.
His plans all fell through when the tickets weren't sold,
And the lecture course then was left out in the cold,
So Roberts began the whole College to scold,
And he hasn't done anything since.

Percy Boynton was head of the picture committee,
And he hasn't done anything since.
He made a mistake and so, ('tis no pity),
He hasn't done anything since.
His schemes were in vain, for the Ninety-Six crowd
Got hold of his pictures and now it's allowed
That Percy was useless and very much "wowed,"
So he hasn't done anything since.

A Deep Student of the Poets.

PROF. GENUNG, (in his Tennyson class)—Gentlemen, we spent our time last term quite profitably in the study of Alfred Tennyson. If, however, it is the wish of the class, we might continue the same author another term.

GATES, '97, (raising his hand)—Professor, could we not find a poet who required rather deeper study?

"TUT" solemnly reads from Amos: "And the Lord shall roar from Zion." Then pauses and asks: "Gentlemen, can any one tell what sort of an animal it is that roars?"

Fiske and Lane together: "A lion!"

"Very good, gentlemen, very good!"

A Beautiful Object Lesson.

A correspondent of the Springfield Union says:—A most touching and beautiful scene was witnessed at a meeting held in Pelham Hollow a few evenings ago. The pastor of Pelham church, Rev. Alfred Lockwood of Amherst college, has been holding a series of meetings in the chapel in the hollow. At the last meeting, while he was speaking, a little child that was creeping around the floor, crept to the platform, looked up in his face, and put up her little arms to be taken.

The young preacher paused, lifted the little one in his arms, and, as she trustfully nestled down upon his shoulder, proceeded with his address, which was an earnest plea to his hearers to seek safety and peace in faith in and service for the Church.

The scene was thrillingly impressive, as the young man with his expressive face all aglow with nobility of purpose and love of human souls, stood pleading with the unconverted, while the white-robed, white-souled little child nestled confidently in his arms, herself a beautiful living illustration of the faith and trust which was the subject of the address and of the purity of purpose which inspired it.

The singularly striking scene will long be remembered by those who saw it.

Roberts Walker !

WHAT varied images flash through our mind as we read this name. What memories of the past, and anticipations of the future. What thoughts of Hamp, what visions of an empty seat in chapel. And, above all, how we shrink, as we remember the smell of the sweet fern he smokes in that large china pipe his brother brought him from across the pond.

Walker has always been an excellent student. In fact, he has been two or three kinds of student. Freshman year he was a regular student at Amherst, and a special at Smith and Capen. Last year he was a special at Amherst and a special at Smith, and this year he is a special at Amherst and a regular at Smith, with full privileges, among them that of calling on Sunday, and of attending Dr. B.'s class in Musical Analysis.

Walker is not only an exemplary student, but an exceedingly sharp man. Why, he must be sharp ; just see what a tremendous cutter he is. Cuts all he pleases, and it doesn't cut a bit of ice with any of his professors. Why, Grosvie excuses him from French on Friday, that he may attend the above class in Hamp. And then think of those nineteen cut-overs in chapel last spring term. All this must take good head-work on his part, and an exceedingly fine screw adjustment of his double-tempered wire-drawn leg-pull on Prexy.

Walker has been everything in college that a well-regulated Christian gentleman could be. He has been an usher, and passed the work-baskets for the shekels. Speaking of this reminds us of the charmingly innocent way in which Davie Buck would place the basket on the floor, look in all his pockets, and from the last extract a dollar bill, which he would fondle lovingly, replace in his pocket, and then pass on the basket. Please pardon this digression, but our eyes fill with tears when we remember those Sophomore Sundays on the back row.

Walker passed an exceedingly pleasant summer in and around Northampton. He visited the New York Ladies' Quartet, part of which lives in Hatfield, and toward the end of vacation took a side trip to Montpelier, Vt. Here, for some days, he enjoyed himself in the society of a charming young lady. This young lady had a pet snapping-turtle, which had to be fed three times daily, so Walker, being the only man around, must needs put on his old clothes and go digging for worms out back of the barn. Further particulars may be obtained from the young lady, who is now at Smith.

"WHY!" says thoughtful Robbins, "the primeval woods of Michigan are as silent as if there wasn't any noise there, whatever!"

A Startling Charge.

EXTRACT from the Boston Herald of March 17, 1894: "The annual match game of basket-ball between picked teams from the Sophomore and Freshman Classes at Smith College was played to-day, amid great enthusiasm. * * * The Gym. at 3.30 was a brilliant sight. One thousand pretty faces turned repeatedly toward the two little rooms each side of the stage and a thousand girls kept up a continual hum. Not a man was to be seen. * * * The venerable Register Marsh of Amherst College stood in the gallery and enthusiastically waved a big yellow banner to show that his sympathies were with the Freshmen. He also wore a huge yellow chrysanthemum in his button-hole."

THE OLIO would like to make a few corrections in the above report of the annual spring-rush and hair-pulling match at Smith.

First:—There are not one thousand pretty girls at Smith—only about 700 of all kinds.

Second:—The "Register Marsh" spoken of is not a mechanical apparatus, but a man, whose proper title is "Registrar" or "Swampy."

Third:—This same man is not "venerable," nor even venerated, though we must confess he has an inordinate love of Freshmen.

Fourth:—It was "Old Doc" Hitchcock who "stood in the gallery" when "not a man was to be seen," and not "Swampy." We suppose that the Herald reporter wished to make some amends for the notoriety given "Swampy" in the Freshman picture lawsuit, but he should know that "Old Doc" is the only man in this institution privileged to do and go as he pleases.

SIDE-TALKS WITH BOYS
BY THE OLIO BOARD

(From the Swampy's Home Journal.)

IN this column we shall attempt to answer briefly any questions asked by our readers.—THE OLIO.

CHARLES B. ADAMS.—“It is not considered proper by best society to extend a call upon a young lady for more than four hours.”

BIXLER.—“We recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla for that tired feeling.”

BACKUS.—“We do not carry patterns for Fauntleroy suits.”

BRADLEY, '97.—“We should advise that you give up at least two of them. As you say, complications may arise, and even at the risk of misinterpreting your true feelings it is best to be safe.”

ALLEN, '98.—“We believe that books on etiquette are published by Harper Bros. & Co., of New York City. No reference is made to the point you ask us about, but we find by consulting several prominent men in College that it is not good form to ask a Junior what he paid for his society pin and request him to translate the letters thereon inscribed.”

“Try fish and Dr. Brown's ‘brain food.’”

ALLAN H. WILDE, '97.—“We know of nothing better than cracked ice, or a sponge worn in the hat. If you find the girth of the hat-band troublesome why not use a different make of shoe-horn to adjust it.”

BOYNTON, '97.—“Your verses are returned with thanks. If you will pardon a suggestion, we think Babyland might accept some of your loftier poetic flights.”

BARNES, '95.—“We are very sorry to hear of your failure to umpire satisfactorily. Foot-ball is a very difficult game to understand thoroughly unless you have played it yourself.”

Laboratory Work in Bib. Lit.

THIS year elective laboratory work has been added to the course in Biblical Literature, as follows :

First Term.—Half an hour a day—Elementary work in chapel cleaning, and moving pulpit for declamations ; lessons in organ repairing. Text-books : “The Student’s Hand-book,” by Roberts Walker ; “The Use of the Broom as a Weapon,” by Lansford Gates ; “The Organic Structure of the Bumble Bee,” by S. P. Hayes.

Second Term.—Two hours a week—Preliminary instruction in chime playing, under the direction of Prof. Edward Clark Hood ; instruction in ushering and in passing the collection-box. Those taking the highest stand are sure of a position on the Deacon football team. Text-books : “The Student’s Hand-book,” continued ; “The Deacon’s Assistant,” with Notes, by William L. Montague, Professor of Modern Languages in Amherst College.

Third Term.—Eight hours a week—The student now leaves the theoretical and takes up the practical side of the question. Work at various points in and about Amherst, including Pratt’s Corners (not H. L. Pratt), Pansy Park, Zion’s Chapel and South Amherst. Text-books : “The Student’s Hand-book,” completed ; “My Sojourn in the South,” by Charley Adams ; “Work Among the Negroes,” by T. C. Elvins and J. N. Haskell.

IF Davy Todd built that observatory at Northampton, and none but Davy Todd had anything to do with its building ; and if Davy Todd embodied in that observatory improvements to be found in no other observatory which Davy Todd didn’t build ; and if Davy Todd had so much trouble to fix that telescope just as Davy Todd wanted it ; and if all the greatest astronomers of the world, including Davy Todd, are trying to have time measured in 24-hour instead of 12-hour stretches ; and if the arrangement of the universe ought to be altered in several important particulars so as to please Davy Todd ;—

Why in the name of Todd don’t they call that observatory “Todd’s Improved Observatory ;” and why don’t they call the telescope a “Toddoscope ;” and why don’t they change the expression “Standard Time” to “Davy Todd’s Time ;” and lastly, why don’t they use the eminently fitting name of “Todd’s Universe ?”

Carmen.

COME listen Freshmen to my song,
I know 'twill please your mind;
The story is not very long,
Nor yet again so very wrong;
On Eph it is a grind.

Some time ago, in Spring it was,
Pa Sterrett bored us all
To death in Greek about some quirk;
We little eared, we watched men work
Beside North College wall.

While Pat ripped open bags of hair,
Mike dumped in lumps of mortar.
Then Pat began to stir with eare,
And all the while they jested there,
Till Mike turned on the water.

Mike thought to get a laugh on Pat,
And play on him the hose;
But such a low vile joke as that
Pat thinks will not at all suit Pat,
And under the chapel goes.

Just overhead dear Monty rules,
Or, one might say, takes naps.
“Je vous donnerai,” he slowly drools,
And all who take his course are fools,
Or else are seeking snaps.

But Mike was not to be outdone,
And laid in wait long time
Just round the corner. In his fist
He held the hose, which buzzed and sissed,
Like Poco reading rhyme.

Friend Eph then came dressed like a doll;
Well satisfied was he
With all the world, but most of all
With Ephraim Wood, although so small
Upon the faculty.

He comes along; the corner's reached;
The dripping hose is raised;
As when a river bursts its dykes
The rushing, gurgling water strikes
Full on his breast—amazed.

His cherished beard and natty clothes
Are soaked all through and round;
And had not Mike then dropped his hose
In frightened haste, who of us knows
But Eph might then have drowned.

The chapel still its ancient tower
Sways gently in the breeze,
And Ephraim Wood shall not forget
That once an Irishman did wet
Him down from head to knees.

Fairbanks' Facile Pen.

NUNGY was going to Europe, and in view of this fact, Fairbanks, the journalist, deemed it advisable to confer with him regarding a half-dozen Rhetoric exercises that he still was owing. Accordingly, he sailed into Nungy's room with a bravado air, like the one he assumes when making a "scoop" for the New York Earth, and nonchalantly remarked, "Professor, I think I am a little behind in my work?"

Nungy looked up, smiled, and consulted his book. "Yes, Fairbanks, you are six exercises behind."

"Well, Professor, I thought I'd stop in and see how many I had to do. I'll have plenty of time now, and some day I'll sit down and finish them up for you. Yes, I can do it some day this week."

"Can you do them all in a day?" asked the Professor.

"Oh, yes," replied George confidently. Fairbanks, you know, is a journalist. He writes very easily, as all journalists do.

Nungy wafted toward George another smile, intoxicating in its sweetness, and then chuckled, "Fairbanks, that reminds me of a story. A young college man I knew once went to a minister and asked him how many sermons a preacher could prepare in a week. The young fellow was ambitious, you see. 'Well,' the preacher replied, 'a first-class minister has all he wants to do in getting up one good sermon. But a poorer quality of preacher can perhaps grind off two, while some dashed fool, who doesn't know enough to go in when it rains, has no trouble whatever in producing a half-dozen. Fairbanks, draw your own conclusions." Our future Horace Greeley drew them and vanished.

The Heavenly Twins.

THE following statements are not made to be believed, but simply because truth crushed to earth will rise again. Therefore be it known that in the melodious class of Ninety-Seven there walk abroad two—we cannot call them youths—who are so far sunk below the level of decency and manhood as to indulge in the practice of osculation. Now just here is the point. They don't seek the supposedly opposite sex on which to wreak their vengeance, but actually kiss each other—think of it Amherst Sophomores! But every night we overhear the same nauseating farewell words as they separate: "Well, good night Gerald dear, so sweet of you to come up to the room so often. Don't let the draft blow on you, darling." And Gerald replies in like manner, and then their beardless faces meet in a chaste and holy good-night kiss. You must know them. There arn't two others in College. Backus and Richmond, the Heavenly Twins.

At Prayer Meeting.

BRAINARD, '96, was leading the meeting. That explained his secret actions for a week past; we had come upon him plugging the Holy Writ several times as though his life depended upon it; we had observed his thoughtful attitudes and expressions, and when we went into the church and slid gently into the front seats, the mystery was revealed. Evidently Brainard didn't appreciate our presence, for he shifted uneasily in his chair and gazed furtively at us over the hymn book. They finished the song and sat down, and we waited in joyful anticipation of the feast to come; but our faces indicated this too plainly, and in an endeavor to gain time in which to collect his scattered ideas Brainard said: "Let us sing another song, two verses of number 56." No one moved, there was a half audible ripple of amusement, and Brainard looked anxious, but waited for something to happen.

It happened: A boy in the back seat yells out, "We just sung that song!"

A Pastoral.

THE sun was just losing his great red disk behind the clouds, which lay low down near the western hills. A gentle breeze was stirring the leaves of the heavy old oaks which shaded the porch of an old farm house. Two young men stood drinking some rich warm milk, and as they drank, they jested in their lightness of heart.

“But I can,” Freddie answered. “I don’t spend all my summers on a farm for nothing.”

The farmer smiled a slow, somnolent smile and went into the shed, where he could be heard saying, “So, boss! so, boss!” and presently a beautiful little Jersey ambled out into the yard, followed by the farmer.

“I brought ye the gentlest critter in the shed. Guess ye won’t have no trouble with her heels,” he said, and brought a stool and pail and set them on the ground beside the cow. Freddie confidently sat down, placed the pail between his knees, and—began the operation.

But no milk spurted into the pail, and Freddie fumed and perspired, and—all but swore; but, try as he would, the hapless youth was able to accomplish nothing beyond mystifying the poor Jersey, who seemed unable to comprehend what was going on. The old farmer, of course, was convulsed with laughter, and the tears ran down his cheeks. Finally Freddie fully realized that his efforts were all in vain, and gave it up in disgust.

The old farmer leaned over the cow in the most impudent manner possible, and said sorrowfully:

“She war milked on’y half ’n hour ago, Mr. Frank!”

And Freddie Trask paid his bet.

From the Junior Debates.

Mr. Witherby.—“When you find a madman who thinks he is mad, you have as sane a man as ever lived.”

Mr. G. Talkative Pearsons.—“You people who have been in prison know what kind of work you have to do.”

Mr. Clayson.—“Do you realize that your little sister has to pass a saloon every day as she goes to school, and what a terrible temptation is set before her.”

Mr. Robinson.—“You all know what it is to think you are in love with a girl and then find out that you were mistaken.”

Silver-Tongued Brainard.—“That is what made the bull-dog Grant say, ‘I will fight it out on this line if it takes all night.’”

Len Field, having spoken lucidly for eight mortal minutes, his colleague, Priddy, arrives and remarks: “I want you gentlemen to undertand that my colleague has another appearanee, and the next time he gets up he’s goin’ to say something.”

Some Things We Would Like to Know.

If Dusty Rhodes took Pa Tuttle’s course with the idea of studying for the ministry?

If Crawford really knows as much as he thinks he does? And if he does, why he doesn’t write an encyclopædia?

If Otterson finds life as void as he seems to?

On Tip’s Return.

STUDENT—By the way, professor, how did you enjoy that little remembrance from the fellows while you were away!

TIP—Oh, I’ll tell you. The thing itself was acceptable; but, you see, I didn’t smoke quite as much as I expected on the passage, and when I got across the pond I had to pay about a dollar and a half duty on ’em.

Her Psyche Knot.

HER face was fair as fair could be,
Her cheeks like rosy peaches blushed ;
And when she bent her head toward me,
Up to my brow the hot blood rushed.
Around her mouth danced dimples two ;
That she was flesh I clean forgot—
I deemed her angel from the blue
Until I saw her Psyche knot.

Like Eiffel tower in French domain,
Like pyramid in Egypt's land,
Like Babel's pile in Shinar's plain—
That mass of hair stood stiff and grand.
With puzzling kink and mazy coil,
And e'en a thousand twists, I wot ;
It perched, a monument of toil,
Upon her head—a Psyche knot.

Biographical Sketch of Schiff.

his life in that place. When he was three weeks old his parents moved to New York, where they have resided ever since.

Morty prepared for college at the Union Club Kindergarten, where he was known as a hard-working student and took first prize in block building. In Amherst he was noted as a crack pool player and lavish entertainer, and he endeared himself to many, especially to the Schiff Club, of which he was president and chief contributor.

But the promising career of this noble young man was cut short, and Mr. Schiff is at present laboring in other fields. Amherst has indeed suffered a great loss, but we give him up freely and contentedly, believing always that "it is better to give than to receive."

A Modern Fairy Tale.

MY brethren, had we but faith as a grain of mustard seed, we might remove mountains ; yea, even College Hall. Let me tell you of the glorious work of Hacko, the Hindoo Hod-Carrier, and how he converted Bogun, the Red-Handed Body-Snatcher of the Himalayas. Hacko was a child of sin, like many of those I see here before me this Sabbath morning. Given up was he to the lusts of the flesh ; yea, even was he a devotee of Bruno's. But, behold how great is the saving power of the Word. One of our noble missionaries so wrought upon the worldly thoughts of Hacko, the Hod-Carrier, that he turned him to paths of righteousness, and so renewed his longing for higher things that he went to the great Robert College. How it was I know not, but in those noble halls Hacko did not thrive to any great extent. Thus, at his graduation, his beloved faculty declared that they could not conscientiously grant him a degree of good and regular sitting unless he should give them some proof of how he was changed in heart. "Go," they said, "into the great and dreadful passes of the mountains. There dwells a people of great fierceness, but who are in daily terror of a fearful robber, Bogun, the Red-Handed Body-Snatcher of the Himalayas. There take up thy cross and preach thy religion, and if thou succeedest, we may then know that thou hast the stuff in thee that makes for righteousness."

"So Hacko, the Hindoo Hod-Carrier, arose and cried out loudly, for he was minded to stay at home with his mother-in-law, as pleasant pastime compared to such an undertaking. Yet finally did he persuade himself that only thus could he get his degree. So out he started, shaking off the dust of his feet upon his trousers legs. Ere long he came to the chapel which the missionaries had erected, a grim testimonial to their oft-repeated failures in these rocky fastnesses. But Hacko, the Hindoo Hod-Carrier, was not discouraged. He gave a boy a quarter to hold the bell, and he went in to pick out the hymns. Soon were assembled all the fierce men of the region, with their wives and numerous families. But, though every seat was filled save one, every face wore an earnest, intent look, and seemed to wait for something. Just as Hacks rose to give out the opening hymn, there appeared in the doorway an awful vision. Who was this enemy of the Gospel, this outcast, this lion in the fold? It was the terrible Bogun himself, the Red-Handed Body-Snatcher of the Himalayas! He was dressed in awful guise, and a terrible sword hung from his girdle, which clanked dismally upon the mud floor as he strode up the aisle and set him down under the very pulpit of Hacks, the Hindoo Hod-Carrier. But did the brave Hacks tremble? Did he swerve from his fearful duty? Nay, nay; he thought of how he had flunked that final in Theosophy, and took another bite off his plug of haskeesh. The services went on, and as Hacks, the eloquent, preached, the tears began to run down the swarthy cheeks of the Red-Handed; for did not Hacks tell him of his sins, of the place where he was going to—also of its climate? And did not fear take hold upon him as he listened?"

“As Hacks, the silver-tongued, finished, the mighty frame of Bogun rose to its feet and spread its hands over the listening tribes. “My neighbors,” quoth he, “you know me, what I am, and how I am a hard man, reaping where I have not cultivated—always in pursuit of the ungodly sheckel. Yet the words of this fellow have so wrought upon me that I would fain give up my old ways.” So Hacks, the Hod-Carrier, descended from the top of his barrel and initiated Bogun, the Red-Handed. They forthwith formed a new organization, of which Hacks was the shepherd, and Bogun the deacon who incidentally passed the hat. So Hacks got his diploma.”

Sandie and the Policeman.

“Is that Sanderson, Edward F. Sanderson?”

“Yes, that’s Sandie.”

“He’s from Cleveland, isn’t he?”

“Yes, I believe so.”

“Well, I suppose he is a responsible fellow, he looks it; but I heard a funny story about him the other day. It happened down in New York, when the Glee Club was there last April. You know they had an afternoon tea at Mrs. Lincoln’s on Thirty-fourth Street. Well, Sanderson, when it came time for the tea, found that he had forgotten the address, and unluckily none of the boys were with him. He ran across a policeman, however, and stopped him with the question, ‘Can you tell me where Mrs. Lincoln lives?’ ‘What street and number?’ was the answering question. ‘Why, that is just what I want to know!’ was Sanderson’s innocent reply. ‘Well, I guess you will have to ask someone else; that’s too hard for me. From the country, ain’t you?’”

“Sanderson did not go to the tea, but he took in ‘A Trip to Chinatown.’ He now sees the difference between Cleveland and New York, they say.”

Bright Baby Sayings.

WALKER, in Rhetoric (replying to Prof. Genung’s question, “What is essential oil?”):—“Essential oil is that kind of oil which is largely composed of the material of which it is made.”

SANDIE in Biology:—“The difference between plants and animals is because plants have their external surface on the outside and animals have it on the inside.”

IN Botany class. Pike:—“Mr. Hunt, what is the nature of the nutriment in seeds?” Mike:—“Nutritive!”

KID CLAYSON:—“A nerve looks like a piece of wet tobacco.”

TIP:—“Gentlemen, I am going to leave you, but Mr. Morris will give you a good stiff exam. In other words, I go but I leave my sting behind me.”

NUNGV, to student reciting:—“That is—involuntary testimony?”

JAGGAR (from the corner, with thumbs in his mouth):—“Umph.”

RICHE asserts to the amazement of the class that he found one place in Germany where he could not get a glass of beer.

Rules of the Biological Laboratory.

All students are expected to ask useless questions of Pike Morris; he receives a salary of $300 per annum for being a general information bureau.

No student shall empty water into the sink without first straining it.

Drawings of the lumbricus damnatus must possess all the accuracy of a photograph. Any mistake in the number of the cilia on the upper left hand tooth of the grasshopper will be promptly punished.

Every student using a microscope will be expected to purchase a nickel-plated frame to support the cover of his microscope-box. Pike has these for sale at reasonable prices.

Every student desiring to show visitors through the laboratory shall deposit 50 cents with Pike to pay for wear and tear on the building.

Fine ready-made grasshoppers and earth worms can be procured in the building. The Simian ape on the upper floor, however, is only on exhibition, and not for sale.

PROFESSOR GENUNG has made an innovation by having a Latin motto put up on the walls of his recitation room. This is a good idea which ought to be followed out. How soothing to the weary wanderer through Professor Esty's recitations would be a pretty gilt motto with some such soul sentiment emblazoned upon it: "She sleeps, my lady sleeps;" or "The mills of the gods grind slowly, but they grind exceeding small?" How about "All men are liars" for a sign over Swampy's door; and "A fool and his money is soon parted," as an inscription over the portals of that den of extortion, the chemical laboratory? Eph and Levi don't need signs. First—for obvious reasons, and secondly—because they teach Freshmen. But Monty, doesn't he deserve a motto? Yes, he should have a chromo, by all means, but the English tongue or any other tongue is not capable of putting in small compass a sentiment strong and vigorous enough to meet the needs of his department.

MR. GROSVENOR translates: "She wore a short, white gown with a fur-below, which was not so long but that it allowed the daintiest of little feet to be seen as far as the ankle."

RICHIE (interrupting):—"You have gone far enough, Mr. Grosvenor."

THE smile with which John Reid sells five copies of Mechanics to a possessor of a Co-op ticket, is like the last one of an undertaker, i. e., at his own funeral.

Bobby in the City.

THE night was cold. In the chilling paleness of the are lights the frost-coated telephone wires waved in gleaming brillianey. The clang of the cable driver's bell rang sharply in the still air. Men, closely wrapped up to the ehin, were hastening homeward, none sceming to see the shrivelled old woman, in her bundle of rags, sitting on the eurb. Piteously she looked at each passer-by, grinding her dismal-toned hand-organ, while her breath froze ere it had left her body. Long she sat, and despair seized her heart as she thought of her little ones at home hungering and dying. Still the crowds hurried on, thinking only of their homes. Suddenly one stopped; he was young, tall, slim and swell. With one hand in his pocket, he approached and looked at the single penny in the old woman's tin cup. A benevolent look of heavenly charity spread itself over his face, and drawing a penny from his pocket-book, he said gently to the old woman:

“I'll match you for it.”

It was Bobby Esty's first visit to the city.

THE following touching tale is taken from an old Greek manuscript discovered around the cork of a whiskey bottle, on the ruins of Pompeii: “One day the Athenians noticed that the venerable Diogenes, instead of carrying his tub about in his usual pceafeul manner, bore a huge club and a dog extinguisher. ‘Why this change in your weapons?’ asked Clito, the Myarite. ‘Hast forsaken thine old quest, my boy?’ ‘Ay, that I have,’ grunted the dirty eynie. ‘I keep my lantern, but that honest man business was no use. With an Amherst gas burner you might find me, but with a lantern, never. But now, —and the old man's eyes blazed as he spoke, and his breath came in gasps such as Bert Pratt makes when he is downed—‘now I have a different object for my search. I seek revenge, I seek the polluted son of his brother-in-law who said that Junior year was a snap.’”

JEFF DAVIS:—“Class of Ninety-Eight, Mr. Davis?”

“No, sir; I am of the class of Ninety-Five, sir.”

---

PROF. EMMIE:—“There will be a geological exeursion to-morrow afternoon to the Gulch; all will please go.”

KINGSLAND:—“Can a man go if he is dead broke?”

HUDSON:—“See anything interesting up in Alaska, Mr. Morris?”

“Yes, the Eskimo girls were very interesting to me.”

Apropos of Recitations in Physics.

THE questions that Brainy Raub propounds to the poor mortals who elect Junior Physics would puzzle even the acute mind of Davy Ego Todd. Raub is evidently very proud of the fifty horse-power thought-condensing engine in his upper story, and likes to exhibit its workings on all occasions. That semi-crucified smile seeming to say, "Don't you wish you could think as fast as I can?" No, we don't; we cast never a covetous eye upon the plexus of brain paths that mark the surface of your cerebellum, like the tracks of an angleworm in soft mud. Some of the remarkably perspicuous sayings of the fledgling professor are hereunto appended: "Now, gentlemen, if the reactionary impulse of the cirque of mass-acceleration is reversely proportional to the erg of influx, why does a carpenter use glue? What? Not see the connection? Plain as day, plain as day. Next. But possibly I can change the wording a little.

"Since there is a harmony of mathematical residues coexistent with the variable of torsional viscosity, is it perfectly clear to all the class why we fulcrate a lever over the solution of  $\frac{1}{2} m v^2$  rather than deduce it by trigonometry? You surely must understand me now. I couldn't possibly make it any clearer without explaining the whole thing," etc., etc.

We hope we are profiting by contact with such a strong and vigorous mind, but still we are glad that Tutor Tommy has us half the time. Tommy doesn't seem to think that he is paid a salary for giving heavy gym exhibitions in mental gymnastics.

The Smokeout that Failed.

ONE evening in the latter part of October, several brilliant members of the Sophomore Class conceived the novel plan of smoking out Freshman "Three Feathers." So, after arming themselves with pipes, cigars and cigarettes, they sauntered slowly up to the room of their prospective victim with villainy in their hearts and tobacco in their pockets.

Now this visit would probably have afforded them no end of amusement and edification, had it not been for the victim himself, whom they had not counted in the deal at all. For when they attempted to force a way into his room, they found themselves confronted by an unlooked for emergency, namely: a revolver in the hands of the aforesaid victim. In the words of Cowan, who was bringing up in the rear of the parade, "We were'nt afraid, but some of us stepped around the corner, just to get out of range; and no wonder, for when you rub your nose in close proximity to the tip end of a gun, you haven't usually time or inclination to figure out the chances of its being loaded with blank cartridges."

Consequently, when the victim shot one bullet to show that he intended to take a hand in this game himself, it appeared to the gang as a real good idea to step out into the hall (around the corner) to consider ways and means. As Trefether let another shot fly toward their locality about this time, they decided that it was too bad to be the occasion of such a profuse waste of ammunition and of such a disturbance to the neighbors, and remembering that they had no idea in the first place of any harsh measures, considered it more gentlemanly to retire gracefully, and so they did.

We do not uphold any man in being fresh and obnoxious, and this little account is not written to praise the deeds of Freshman Trefether—he probably has done that to his own satisfaction; but it is offered to the public simply as another proof of the general uselessness and lack of nerve that characterize the class of Ninety-Seven.

A Lament by an Occupant of South College.

WE'VE groaned in vain and writhed in pain at the screech of the Aggie band,
And swore and tore and did many things more when the chimes began to ring;
But these we'll endure and be grateful, I'm sure, provided you never demand
That we listen in quiet and refrain from a riot when Ellinwood tries to sing.

Constantinople's Bride.

News comes to THE OLIO Board that, in competing for The Student, some remarkable squibs had been written by one Dwight, a Freshman. The Board has spent an immense amount of time and money in the research for these masterpieces of literary effort, and it gives us great pleasure to present them just at this point. We feel fully justified in the claim that, by publishing them, we greatly enhance the value of our book, and, to an immeasurable extent, contribute to the fund of literary gems. We hope they will meet with the pronounced success which their merit deserves:

"Dame Rumor has it that only one Freshman has thus far been salted down."

"Among other of the numerous professorial upheavals, Professor Grosvenor has taken possession of his new mansion on Faculty Street."

"Professor Olds was obliging enough to give his classes a little let-up last week."

"Some of the fellows went over to Hamp the other day, under the care of Professor Todd, to look at the astronomical instruments over there. Our sisters across the river are better off for instruments than us."

"A good many fellows are wondering why '98 is so small. The Student guesses it is because of the disturbance over the President last year, and a few other little things taken together, with the low tide in father's and mother's pocket-books."

"Professor Elwell takes his children, three in number, out to ride in a small little goat cart propelled by a cute little donkey."

"It is said that Professor Estey's dog is as old as he is, as it has lost all its teeth."

Gentle reader, if you have survived the perusal of these Dwightisms, we promise that this is positively their first and last appearance.

To Freshman 18c:

Thou long-shanked, stout-limbed striver-after speed,

Thou embryo of what might be a walker;

Keep up thy sand and to thy stride give heed,

And we give odds that thou wilt make a corker.

If Roberts Walker leads three prayer meetings a week, is deacon of the College Church and vice-president of the Y. M. C. A., how in heaven can he miss getting a gold-plated horn with diamond studs.

Pike.

To the quiet town of Amherst there came one autumn day
A prepossessing anthropod composed of mortal clay,
It had eilia round the orifice which answered for a mouth,
And these cilia gently rustled when the wind was in the South.
In appearanee 'twas a mixture 'twixt a grizzled heathen sage
And a pre-historic jackal of the paleozoie age.
Its capillary processes had quite a eooney kink
And we stamped it on inspection as old Darwin's missing link.

Tip Tyler took a needed rest and sailed across the sea,
And his elasses gave him eigarettes to aid the jamboree;
But the worst of Tip Ty's leaving was what he left behind,
This flagellated rarity by Satan's hand designed.
It flunked the major portion of an inoffensive class,
And refused to give four fellows e'en the chanee to try to pass;
And as further exhibition of its warm and deep devotion
It tutored all the men it flunked and took up a eolleetion.

We extend eongratulations to the Monson men of note
Whose untiring steadfast efforts (pardon, Prex., the words I quote,)
Did "gently and yet firmly remove," with elub and gun
This hyperbolie paragon of vintage, Ninety-One.
We extend eommiserations to the men of Ninety-Eight,
Who have entered through the portals of the biologic gate.
Your femur was extended in a quite unrighteous way
But sinee you're in the jaws of death, bedad, you'll have to stay.

Now when, friend Pike, you're squirming on the devil's sharpest spit,
O'er the fire of retribution at the bottom of the pit,
You may think of days at Amherst and wish they had not been,
For 'twas there you planned and carried out all kinds of trieks and sin.

COCHRANE, '96, and Stackman, '98, were noticed the other day walking along the street together. The sidewalk was barely wide enough to contain their combined smile, and, as it was, all pedestrians were forced to retire into the gutter to avoid its deadly sweep. It is hoped that the Amherst poliee will prevent in the future another combination of these two gentlemen.

As to Old Doc.

OPINIONS differ as to Old Doc. Some claim that he's a well-intentioned old gentleman. Others are strongly of the opinion that his good intentions, if he has them at all, are thwarted in some way by an overruling power. As to some of his qualities, however, there can be little doubt.

Few men can make so energetic and stirring an appeal as Old Doc. in chapel before a championship game. Who of us that heard it, for instance, will ever forget that impassioned climax of the fall of '92. "Young men, remember first and last that you are working for the truth, righteousness and Amherst College! Let every man who goes to Williams wear his rubbers." Much that Old Doc. has to say sounds better on the tongue than on paper. Who can forget specific examples of that general class of remarks of which Old Doc. can so feelingly say, "Gentlemen, that is a strong statement; I will repeat it."

But these are not the only things with which memory connects Old Doc. When he takes charge of chapel all ears are open and listening to what he has to say. A single generalization concerning morning prayers might be that he who speaks the most is listened to the least. However unfortunate this is, it is true. Ordinarily few students can tell what has been read or said in chapel a moment after the mechanical exercise is completed. But compulsory worship is nevertheless a good old custom, and so of course we are all glad to do our duty by keeping it up. Old Doc., as we said, however, is an exception to the general rule. When he gets up to lead, all attention is given him. Not a few are the ungrammatical constructions which, dropped from his lips, have fastened themselves upon our intellects during the last two years. Not a few are the athletic victories which have been prayed for in no uncertain terms, and at these times the student smiles to his neighbor and says, "Amen" to himself. Then there are times when some peculiarly startling sentence smiles upon our inner consciousness and leaves its impress too deep even to be lost. Such an occasion was a fine morning last winter term. It was examination week, and after a characteristic passage of scripture Old Doc. gave way to the Glee Club for a rest. Then, having gotten breath again, he prayed a long, fervent and comprehensive prayer, and at one sentiment expressed the "young manhood" awaiting examination were at least surprised. For he prayed that we might be strengthened for the peculiar duties of the day and week, and that we all might be enabled to help one another more than ever before." A thoughtful crowd passed out of chapel that morning, and perhaps more than one said to himself that he had been too selfish in refusing to help a weary brain pass the physics examination last term.

The Maiden and Her Friend.

(With no especial reference to anybody.)

Once on a time there lived a maid,
A maid with noble fame ;
Who dwelt within old Amherst's walls,
And she was a beaut., I can tell you, and everybody was dead stuck on her shape, and FREEDOM was her name.

Now, FREEDOM had a trusty friend—
At least she thought him truc—
But subsequent proceedings seemed To prove pretty conclusively to FREEDOM, anyway, that you can't most always tell just what a friend will do.

For when her friend found out that she Could easily be bossed,
He took her business for his own,
And pretty soon FREEDOM began to get onto the fact that her fame, name and everything else was most completely lost.

She found her power all was gone,
Her blessings at an end ;
And when she came to figure up,
She allowed that if anybody was responsible for her loss of dignity and honor, it was probably that same old friend.

Now, you may read between the lines,
And think you read it well ;
But you must do it for yourselves,
And you needn't think we're going to get ourselves into trouble by explaining the meaning of this poem, for we aren't; we're too cooney, and we don't intend to tell.

It was an unusually quiet day in the Bib. Lit. class. Whiskers Lombard had just finished reading a ten-thousand-word thesis on "Amos' Pet Cat." The room was in silenee. After a dull pause, Tut. awoke from a deep reverie of unfinished tasks, and said: "After the services, the class may pass in their abstracts." Whereupon the laughter that arose was equal to that at Old Doc's Lectures in Hygiene.

Ballad of '96's Sophomore Rush.

A peaceful Amherst village
Gray college walls uprise,
And campus elms sway graceful boughs
'Neath tender azure skies.
There caught in leafy marshes,
The wind-songs fall asleep;
And ring-doves white on pinion light
Round wild towers sweep.

But once the birds of innocence
Forsook that calm retreat;
And once the noise of battle
Rang down the peaceful street.
There gathered hosts of Freshmen,
There massed the Sophomore proud,
While hearty cheers, disclaiming fears,
Re-echoed long and loud.

Like panting hounds freed from the leash,
The Fresh sprang at the foe,
Upon their infant heads the Sophs
Rained fiercely blow on blow.
Then clanged the wild tin-trumpet
In urchin's hand upheld,
And streams of blood mixed with the mud,
While loud the wounded yelled.

O then did Soph and Freshman
Old grudges well repay,
And coached were many noses—
It was a glorious day.
Then cheeks were etched with crimson,
And teeth were swallowed down,
And jaws were torn and ears were shorn
Enough to stock a town.

When next the golden sunlight
Flamed over Pelham's crest,
The conflict long was over,
The Freshman lay at rest.
On all the field they rested
In fragments fine and small—
Lo! here a shred and there a shred
Of Freshman—that was all.

They gathered up the fragments
In baskets wide and deep;
And planted them in Pelham
Beneath the sod to sleep.
And when in future ages
Old Pelham lacks crude brass,
She'll mine it from the graveyard
Of Ninety-Seven's elass.

Modern College English.

JO-JO, after a three-years' course under Frinkie, and one year under Nungy, loquitur as follows:

“ Had a long grouch last night; felt roeky a few, so blew over to Reddy's. Struck Bix down there, and he'd pinched a beautiful wet and wanted me to get in the push, but I wouldn't split his wood. Anchored, though, and had some whales on toast, and threw a couple Bass under my shirt. We horsed the Bad Gleason to death—he's easy fruit, that man. The good Bruiser blew in and gave us the glad hand; and it was such a dead-smooth night we sailed down Pleasant street to queer the queens. Met Bish ragged out to beat the earpet, headed for a skirt party at the convent—he thinks he euts all kinds of fog with the girls. Bruiser and I smoked just a few, joked some beauts, got our legs jerked, slipped our trolleys, and meandered baek to our stys. ‘Sink a soda?’ Certainly will I!”

YOUNG STAPLES he sang in the choir,
His voice went to G or e'en hoir;
It attained such a height,
It went clean out of seight,
And they found it next day in the spoir.

Des Moines, as the readers of the GAZETTE are aware, is rather red-headedly represented by the boys and girls from this city in attendance upon various Eastern schools. Among the young men giving more than usual promise of a successful future, is Dick Rollins. Dick when quite a small boy used to sell papers for the writers of these lines. He was a lad of genuine business qualities, sterling good character, and an air of admirable confidence—not of the bold, demonstrative character, but along the line of quiet self-reliance. He is pursuing a course of special study at Amherst. It is a little out of the regular order, and his folks were a little doubtful about him making such arrangements as were necessary to the following of it. But the young man was quite confident he could induce the college authorities to make their system a little elastic for the purpose, and according to his wants. He reached Amherst one evening about dark. Starting uptown from the depot he accosted a gentleman whom he overtook, with an inquiry as to the location of a certain hotel. The gentleman was to pass the house. He told Dick to "fall in" and he would guide him. The man being of a companionable nature, he and the boy were soon engaged in an interesting conversation. Dick told him what he had come to Amherst for, and something of the difficulties he expected to encounter. As they reached the hotel, the gentleman, with a twinkle in his eye, grasped his hand and said, "I wouldn't wonder, young man, if I might help you a little, I'm president of the institution we've been talking about." And he was, and Dick succeeded in carrying out the plans he had cherished.

To Fletcher.

O, he's the kid who made the ball nine Freshman year:
His admiration for himself is most sincere.

    You can see it in his walk,
    In his exhibition stalk;
A dandy cock, indeed, is Bobbie dear.

A Tale of Athens.

BEING THE DREAM OF MÆCENAS HUNT.

THE lofty Corinthian pillars of the temple on the Acropolis were beginning to play their flutes, and the altars near by were merrily smoking. They had sworn off cigarettes and taken to meerschaums ever since the agent of the Heliopolis Pipe Company had shown them the folly of their ways and the nicotine in the cigarettes by blowing their smoke through the sheet of mist that overhung the temple, thus staining the sheet so badly that all the washerwomen of Athens had been unable to restore it to its pristine purity. Several walls were standing near by, listening to the fluting of the pillars, while the mosaic floor lay familiarly at their feet. To one side of the temple you could see a little brook running away down the mountain, pursued by a gentle murmur, and the murmur was rapidly gaining.

At this juncture a wild-looking man, with his hands in his pockets, stole his way into the midst of the quiet scene. Although stealing away was a violation of the temple ordinances, he was not arrested, for the guard was engaged that moment in courting the muse, and had already succeeded far enough to get on the same pedestal with her and entwine his arm about her waist. But the haggard intruder noticed not the scene of affection, nor did the sacred pig squeal on the lovers.

The stranger, with his hands in his pockets, was accoutred in spurs, jockey whip, and had a riding habit which covered the nakedness of his ignorance. He seemed to be looking for something. Just then a storm came up and asked him what he wanted.

"I've lost my horse," replied Hunt, for it was none other than the veritable Mæcenas himself."

"That's a good mount over there," replied the questioner, pointing to Mount Parnassus. "Where are you going, anyway?"

"I'm journeying to the end of Demosthenes on the Crown," replied Mike; "but I'm not going, anyway. I only ride; walking's bad for my health."

"That's right," put in the storm, who always himself rode on the wings of the wind. "I'll see what I can do for you." So he halloed to the echo, and the echo answered and said he didn't know where the animal was unless Jimmy Woodworth had borrowed him. This proved to be the case, and, accordingly, happy in heart and horse in hand, Mike began to work his way out of the temple. But, being constitutionally opposed to work, he soon gave it up and resolved to fall asleep. He must have fallen too hard, for he immediately woke up and began to say naughty words to Georgie Bliss, who had banged him over the head with a dictionary.

Moral—Mike, don't doze over your Greek lesson.

George DeW. Moulson.

BY A POET.

If, while o'er the campus walking, you may chance to hear the talking of a man who seems to think that all his words are priceless lore,
Who with nice enunciation, and with fine elaboration, tumbles out precisest
English till you think him quite a bore;
Do not come to the conclusion, "He's the prof. in eloquention, or an author whose effusions one can buy in any store,"

No, it's Moulson, nothing more.

He feels keenest exultation, if in course of conversation, he can thunder forth some words that terrify you to the core—
Any sound sesquipedalian, never mind if it be alien, to meaning or to sense, provided it has an awful roar—
He will pluck you by the vesture, and with daintiest of gesture, he will stab you with that learned word till your mental ribs are sore,
And you cry with hair dishevelled, "Is this fiend or is it devil?" and the all explaining answer comes,

It's Moulson, nothing more;
Only Moulson, nothing more.

If there's any man in College, who's in want of any knowledge, upon any theme whatever, let him go to Moulson's door,
And within that mystic portal, he will find the only mortal, who assumes to have the wisdom that King Solomon had of yore;
But in this is George pre-eminent; for you see, the olden Testament never states the fact that Solomon took a Kellogg prize; therefore G. De W.'s very proud, and he sings it long and loud, "By the gods in all this earth there's but one Moulson and no more;"
And we all take up the measure, and repeat it o'er with pleasure, "Yes, thank heaven, in this earth there's but one Moulson and no more."

Faculty Lecture Course.

HAVING realized for a long time that the students ought to have an opportunity of hearing various members of the Faculty lecture on topics with which they are especially familiar, THE OLIO takes pleasure in announcing that the following entertainments have been partially arranged, dates to be decided later:

“Author’s Readings,” by Ephraim Wood, M. A.

Mr. Wood, in this entertainment, reads a number of his original translations from the Horatian odes. The profit of the lecture is increased by the sympathetic criticism which Mr. Wood offers upon his own productions, especially by comparing them with the standard translations of Theo. Martin, and others, to the sad disparagement of Theo. Martin.

This lecture sets forth the baneful effects of too rapid instruction, and is very timely, in view of Mr. Raub’s being temporarily appointed Physics Lecturer. The author is a thorough believer in the slow and sure method of teaching; he never allows his talk or explanation to get at all in advance of his class. He mentions with pride that at least a half dozen students fall asleep at each of his recitations.

A very interesting lecture on travel, replete with reminiscences, and overflowing with wit. Mr. Elwell is an enthusiast on the subject, and gives the details of his trip through the classic land with spirit and eloquence.

Mr. Sterrett has selected some of the most realistic passages in Greek poetry, and fitted them for illustrations by calcium light. He thoroughly enjoys his work, and accordingly is bound to be interesting. The lecture is for men only.

Mr. Todd, though (in his own words) “one of the greatest astronomers in the world,” has turned aside from his work in the scientific field to prepare this valuable lecture. Of course, Mr. Todd can speak with authority on such a topic.

This entertainment is an innovation, but we feel confident it will meet with deserved success. Professor Tyler assumes a number of Delsartian attitudes in the blaze of a calcium light, and the emotions or feelings suggested by the tableaux are to be guessed by the audience. The man making the highest number of correct guesses will be presented with an edition de luxe copy of Dr. Hitchcock's Anthropometric Manual

The students are all well acquainted with the startling and wonderful illustrations continually employed by Dr. Tuttle in his sermons. Suffice to say, they have never been equaled either for dramatic power, or strength of delineation; and what the speaker has to say on the subject will come with commanding interest from a wealth of experience.

Parlor Exhibition of Curiosities.

Health Humbug Seelye, Eva Lingering Morris, and others, will be on exhibition a few hours. Of course, our patrons cannot expect anything in the shape of a lecture from the attractions of the evening, for they would be incapable of such a feat. They will be open merely for inspection and examination. No one will be allowed to feed peanuts to the curiosities.

When Russell Sings.

WHEN Russell sing, we seem to feel
A sudden quiver o'er us steal,
As though some file was rasping sharp,
Or the devil was playing his hellish harp,
Or a frog were trying to squeal.

Oh, if he only would reveal
What ails his larynx, we would seal
Our lips fore'er, and not remark
When Russell sings.

But as it is, our senses reel,
Whene'er that voice with its edge of steel
Burst out fortissimo; we start,
We swear and curse, but yet we smart,
For their's nothing can our anguish heal,
When Russell sings.

TIP, to class:—“Don't you remember that verse in the Bible about when the head says to the feet that it has no need of them, and what the Bible says about the head in that case?”

FRESHMAN CLEWS:—“Yes, I know, professor; you cut it off and cast it out.”

I desire to take exercise to-day Oct. 14, 94, in the form of tennis
Fred Ellis

IS THERE not something wrong with the Amherst system, when a man of the stamp of Ellis will deliberately sign his name to such a statement as the above? For who can imagine the weary Freddie playing tennis—or doing anything out of class except reading the paper, or begging a match? Again, could a man play tennis in such a gale as blew across this college hill on that same October 14, 1894?

O tempora, O mores!

To Whiting.

“OH! wad some Pow’r the giftie gie us
To see oursel’s as others see us.”—BURNS.

We wonder if the one who wrote,
These words so often quoted,
Had Freshman Whiting in his mind,
And if he, too, had noted

How beneficial it would be
If Whiting should, some day,
His asininity give up
And hear what people say.

And if he finds that people like
A man to be a man,
Perhaps he’ll cease his monkey shines,
And try some other plan.

Over the Notch.

OVER the Notch, 'neath forest-clad height
Rock-strewn, o'er-frowning his path on the right,
He wends his swift way to that land of-delight,
Over the Notch.

Over the Notch, where the arbutus grows,
Or autumn's bright red midst its pale yellow glows,
Soft breeze from the South in his face gently blows,
Over the Notch.

Over the Notch, to where sweet voices call,
Fair faces glance coyly from window and hall,
Or lure him to "Pepper-Box"—best place of all—
Over the Notch.

Over the Notch, in the darkness of night,
The deep, sheer ravine's fearful plunge on his right,
Slow and sadly returns he, this love-stricken night,

Why Did Sterrett Want It?

A Latin play was to be given at Harvard, and the papers announced the fact along with the news that Professors Elwell, Wood, Cowles and Sterrett, of Amherst, were to be present, and President M. E. Gates. Tom Hitchcock was also going, and on meeting Prof. Elwell one day, he told him so. Levi was ambling down the street, and being on the way to dinner his smile was of tender forgiveness toward the stray humanity he met.

"Going to the Latin play, are you, Tom? Well, I'll tell you what to do. You go up and see if the trot of the Phormio has been taken out of the library. There ought to be one copy there. If there isn't, go right down to Sterrett's and ask him if he's through with it," and chuckling to himself, Levi passed on to his dinner.

J. H. LOUD TO NUNGY—"Can a drunken man be said to be in a state of exaltation?"

NUNGY—"I cannot say from experience."

Old Derwall on Memory.

NOW, gentl'mun, er—right here, now, I'll—er—make a few remarks, yer know, on—er—on—er—r—r—mem'ry, yer know. Mem'ry is a valuable thing if we—er—ta—ta—if er—yer hev it, yer know, and don't forgit! Now, you learn a lot o' things about this and that and th' other, and you keep 'em 'bout a day, yer know, and—er—r—r—um—er—r—um—eh! eh! eh! and then, yer know (here Derwall gets warmed up), and then—a—a—a—yer forgit all—l—l 'bout um; yes, all 'bout um. Well now, gentl'mun, that's not the right way; mem'ry is ter remember things by, yer know—a—and if—a—mm—a yer forgit all you ever learn, yee'll never know much. You must learn, gentl'mun, to 'soeiate one thing with another and—a—mm—a—ta—a—ta—a—m—make an impression on your mind, y' know, then you wunt fergit.

Now, fer example, s'posin' two of you fellers—er—were ridin' out in a kerrige, well—er—a—er—say—ter—ter Hamp! Yer—a—talkin' 'bout this thing and that—and—a-a lot of other nonsense, yer know! Don't make much diff'rence, y' know, and yer don't care whether it raining' up er down! Well now, yer know, 'sposin' yer git onto the railroad crossin' between here and Ha-adley, a—mm—a—er—and—er—r—r—yer know, while yer a talkin' and a foolin', ye' know, the car comes down the track—a, and cleans yer horse right out from in front of yer, what then! Do yer fergit that right off? N—o—o, sir! a—and if yer come back to—a—yer A—a—lma Mater fifty years afterwards, yer know, and ride over to Hamp, yer'll remember it just s'f 'twas yesterday. A—a—and—er—yer know, it's because it made an impression on yer, and yer sociated every part of that ride—a—ta—a—on the a—accident, y' know. Well, now, gentl'men, its exactly the same way in chemistry, yer know, this—a—mm—a 'sociation of ideas and—a this making an impression on yer minds.

Now—a, can some one tell me quick—a—mm—a—a—what's—a—the result if yer pour water on—a phosph'rus (???) quick!! (And the recitation goes on as before.)

Our Military Blake.

It once happened in the course of human events that Blake, one of our nice little Sophomores, received an invitation to an officers' ball in Boston. "Of course you know it is a very swell affair," said he, "and military uniforms are worn; but I, luckily, am well equipped in that department of my wardrobe." Of course every one wondered what he referred to, but no questions were asked. The night of the ball came and the large hall was filled with a gay and fashionably dressed throng. The band had just struck up the first waltz when in walked Blake in a Ninety-Seven gym. suit. The band stopped; the clock threw up its hands; the windows took on a death-like glassy appearance; men shrieked and women fainted. As soon as the band regained consciousness it struck up the well-known popular air: "Swim out O'Blake. You have no time to spare."

To Our New Additions.

MR. W. P. BIGELOW, you're new, awfully new. You've just got in from Germany. Good. But that doesn't make you any better than Pike, for—of course you knew it—Pike has been to Alaska. He saw the Eskimo girls, and you saw Germany's country bumpkins. He drank candle grease and stewed dog-fat. What of it? You drank lager and ate schweitzer-kase sandwiches.

Pike got pulled for swiping flowers in the public parks; well—you paid for yours and Fraulein—but we never could remember names. Pike was bitten by a dog, and it cost him a four-dollar bill to make it right with the bereaved owners of the canine. The papers said the dog died in great agony. That dog deserves a monument. In his zeal to emancipate humanity from one of its greatest burdens, he miscalculated his capacity. Now, if he had bitten Billie Raub or Tutor Tommy, why Amherst would have had to put on mourning, but it was not physical meat his teeth bit into; it was saeccharomyeco—lumbria, bacillus, saturated steak—aye, Pike was too much for him. Yes, Pike lost about a pound of flesh by that bite; but that isn't the saddest part; the saddest part is that there are still about 153 pounds remaining. Perhaps the college would subscribe at the rate of $4 a pound to be relieved of the other 153.

Mr. Bigelow, you've started in well; you make Vesper service almost endurable nowadays, except when you try to ring in too much first tenor. You rival Nungy, already for rendering your classes soporific. But, by the way, you must never be discouraged when some little Freshmen on the back seat corrects the gender of some of your nouns. The poor little thing don't mean anything; he doesn't know any better. So cheer up. Why, even Monty doesn't teach any more French than you do Dutch, so what's the odds?

Stackman's Smile.

AMONG our acquisitions in the class of Ninety-Eight,
There's a certain individual with an individual gait;
He's innocent and unbesmirched by any taint of guile,
And yet somehow we always run when Stackman wafts his smile.

His face a benediction is—long meter
one at that;
It's an excellent advertisement of the void beneath his hat,
Still it always wears a pensive look as though it were a trial
To carry that expansive grin, that omnipresent smile.

'Tis said, we dare not vouch it true—
that every blessed morn

When Stackman wakes, and sets to work to clothe his beauteous form,
He first puts on his coat and vest, and combs his hair in style,
And then puts on his collar and tie, and last puts on his smile.

The story now is going the rounds that Carl has fallen in love,
But not with any Amherst bird, nor yet with Pelham dove;
Oh, no! His heart is set on something rarer by a pile.
And that rare something—can't you guess—is his gigantic smile.

If you've ever seen a seven hat on a six and a quarter head,
If you've ever seen a seven foot man within a six foot bed.
If you've ever seen—well, anything whose fit is simply vile;
Why then you know how Stackman looks embellished with his smile.

Foreign Notes.

IT was brilliant for Griffin, '97, to ask some one if he came from the same place his wife did. This might be explained by the fact that the bashful Soph. was in the throes of embarrassment, due to a sudden introduction to the husband of a lady whom he thought fancy-free.

SPIDER ROELKER proved himself the enigma of the Aurania last summer. It was an interesting question to solve with which, of all the girls he walked, would he finally settle down and make love to in a rational (?) manner, as Loud had done long since. It could be seen that his frisky heart was yearning to love somebody; and so the query was pregnant with interest. But he didn't settle down, and the only explanation offered up to date was the one given identically by the several fellows who, one by one, did settle down with Roelker's girls; that the giddy Spider only waited to find out which of them preferred him, and as the result of his quest was unsatisfactory to his self-love, he was obliged to take Hobson's choice, which was what the boy shot at, namely, nothing—sometimes translated Roelker.

CUPID OSGOOD has never forgotten his Sophomore cane-rush. But it was a mean way he took to get even with the world. It was all right to want to get even; but we cannot pardon him for the way he did it. He deliberately walked upon deck one day last summer, hunted up an easy chair with a rug in it, sat down, and then appeared surprised and apologetic when he found that he had sat upon a feeble old woman who was occupying the chair. We see him now in all his villainy, and that lovely young face which, before the event, expressed to us only child-like trustfulness and simplicity, is now horrible with latent cruelty and revengefulness.

SOME answers to questions put at random:

Jo-Jo.—What is the dog-watch? “The dog-watch means that Freddie Ellis must stay up on deck and watch the chair and rugs, while I go down to the smoking-room and get some wet.”

J. H. Loud, '96.—Where did you get the new light in your eyes? “She gave it to me!” Where did you get that ring and the rest of your jewelry? “She gave it to me.” Where did you get the letter? “She wrote it to me.”

Old Doc.—Did you see anything new this summer, Doctor? “Yes, I saw a sea serpent and some other snakes.”

Spider Roelker, seeing an innocented chair near that of an attractive young lady, seats himself and is immensely enjoying himself when an old codger comes up and asks, “Are you sure that is your chair you're sitting in, young man?” Kid Roelker immediately apologizes and vacates. Later he meets Percy Cushman, and relates his experience to him. “Why, you poor fool,” says Percy; “that isn't his chair; it is mine.”

Missionary Training.

At last the aching void in the curriculum of the College has been filled. That terrible feeling of loss which came upon the Class of Ninety-Four when they found that the course in Biblical Literature was limited to one term need never again surge through the pulsing veins of the gut-seeker or prospective divine. Let peace and prosperity reign, and sundry copies of Holy Scripture be carefully dusted for the fray.

The course is pursued after the German University method. If this be true, let us be thankful that we live in the great and glorious land of the free, and that Pa Tuttle doesn't teach any more courses. But then there is the prize, that glittering possibility of wealth burning before the eyes of so many bewildered students, and the illustrious example of previous prize-winning. Go on, ye searchers after truth, and as your eyes ache with much toil, think of the glory of your task.

CLOTHING AND FURNISHING GOODS

FOR
BOYS, READY -
MADE
TO MEASURE.

IN the Department for Clothing to order will be found, in addition to a full line of seasonable goods—all the year round weights in all qualities, with a wide range of price there-by giving the fullest opportunity for selection.

The particular care exercised by us in the cut, manufacture and novelty of pattern in our Men's Ready-made Stock, is also extended to our Clothing for Boys and Children, and guarantees exclusive style and the best of value at no higher prices than are frequently asked for garments made in large wholesale lots and of inferior workmanship.

Our Furnishing Goods embrace a most complete assortment of articles in that line for Boys as well as Men; Underwear, Hosiery, Gloves, and Neckwear in original shapes and colorings, imported by us from leading London manufacturers; also Lounging Jackets, Waterproof Coats, etc.

In this Department we have added a new line of leather and wicker goods, including Luncheon Baskets, Holster Cases, Sheffield Plate Flasks, Riding Whips, Crops, Dog Canes and Golf Sticks.

Catalogue, Samples and Rules for Self-Measurement sent on application.

The New York Tribune.

FOREMOST REPUBLICAN NEWSPAPER.

Its Weekly paper has 168,000 or more circulation per week, which is absolutely without a parallel in this country. Mr. Horr's articles on The Tariff, Coinage, and Labor questions are alone worth the price of the paper. $1 a year.

The Semi-Weekly, the finest paper of its class in the United States, contains Mr. Horr's articles, and is pre-eminently the paper for city people, who dwell beyond the range of the Daily. $2 a year.

The Daily occupies the unchallenged position of being the especial journal of the honest, high-class, industrious and successful inhabitants of the metropolis and its suburbs. $10 a year.

In all its issues The Tribune is the most active, progressive and influential champion of Protection, Honest Currency, and every other cause, with which the generous youth of America should ally themselves, and, for the most part, do.

New Tariff and Income Tax Law.—Old and new rates carefully compared. This will be frequently used for reference the next two years. 10 cents a copy.

Tribune Almanac, 1895.—Out in January. This number will be in great demand, owing to its full returns of the phenomenal elections of 1894. A vast variety of other statistics. 25 cents a copy.

THE MOTOR CYCLE

Is the greatest invention of the age. One gallon of oil carries you 100 miles at from one to as many miles an hour as you dare ride. No pedaling necessary—always ready. All you have to do is to mount the machine, push the button and off you go. We are the sole manufacturers of this machine, also of the Four-Wheel

A Lit. Editor with a Literary Taste.

HOW rare it is to find a man ablaze with genius' fire;
Who lifts his head among the stars, and e'en a little higher!
But we have one, — he thinks himself with every talent graced,
And he is William Joseph Boardman with the literary taste.

Now there's quite a lot to Boardman; he's a very brilliant man,
And nature has endowed him on a very liberal plan.
But of all his grand capacities, one we can't pass o'er in haste:
His rare, exact, and finely-balanced literary taste.

A man who very much regrets the faults in Homer's style,
Who thinks that he will soon revise the writings of Carlyle,
Who notes, that he — and Milton — both wrote English fairly chaste, —
That is William Joseph Boardman with his literary taste.

We'd rather have the chicken pox with a broken leg thrown in,
We'd rather have a compound dislocation of the chin;
We'd rather have consumption and grow skinny through the waist,
Than have a hard attack of Boardman's literary taste.

S stands for Swampy, who with work is overrun,

A Mile Deep, 13 Miles Wide, 217 Miles Long, and Painted Like a Flower.

THE Grand Cañon of the Colorado River, in Arizona, is now easily accessible to tourists. A regular stage line is in operation from Flagstaff, Arizona, on the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad, making the trip from Flagstaff to the most imposing part of the Cañon in less than 12 hours. Meals and comfortable lodgings are provided throughout the trip. The view of the Grand Cañon afforded at the terminus of the stage route is the most stupendous panorama known in nature. There are also two trails at this point leading down the Cañon wall, more than 6,000 feet vertically, to the river below. The descent of the wall is a grander experience than climbing the Alps, for in the bottom of this terrific and sublime chasm are hundreds of mountains greater than any of the Alpine range.

A book describing the trip to the Grand Cañon, illustrated by many full-page engravings from special paintings, and furnishing all needful information, may be obtained free upon application to C. A. Higgins, 725 Monadnock Building, Chicago, Ill.

Notice.

Our readers will please observe that on page 151 we have given Pratt Institute great honor in ascribing to it our annual Heavy Gym. Exhibition. This was a winning card in our hand, thus early recognizing the claims for a greater Amherst. We trust this gentle hint may be conducive of great results.
